Rep. McSwain Arranges Official Parley to Save Service.

Final Agreement Likely in 10 Days

Legislation to Fix Permanent Policy Will Be Put Through.

By James D. Secrest.

The Washington-Hoover Airport will not be closed today, as was expected.

Representative J. J. McSwain, of South Carolina, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, took steps last night to prevent the Capital city from being deprived of an airport.

Until a late hour yesterday it seemed certain that the airport would be closed and that air-mail planes and transport planes, scheduled to land here, would be shifted to Baltimore.

The controversy centered around Military road, which cuts through the airport. The War Department, which controls the road, asked the Department of Justice what steps it could take to force the owners of the airport to remove the patrol it maintained over the road.

When Samuel J. Solomon, manager of the airport, heard about this, he announced that beginning today the patrol over the road would be abandoned. Once he had said this, the Department of Commerce announced that it would withdraw its sanction of the airport and the Postoffice Department announced that air mail would be landed at Baltimore.

Statement Is Issued.

Representative McSwain, who has been vitally interested in the airport situation here, made a canvass of the officials involved last night, called in Mr. Solomon, and at 9 p. m. the following statement was issued:

"As the result of an understanding negotiated by the Hon. J. J. McSwain, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives between Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff of the United States Army, acting on behalf of the Secretary of War, Hon. Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General in charge of air mail, Col. J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and Mr. Samuel J. Solomon, vice president in charge of the National Airport Corporation, operating the Washington-Hoover Airport, it has been agreed:

That the highway patrol guards at the traffic lights on Military road will be continued as a temporary measure, pending the enactment of legislation, and that the Airport will continue in operation for transport and mail service. This arrangement is to meet a temporary emergency and is to continue for ten days from February 15, which should be ample time to provide proper safeguards.

Representative McSwain said:

"I am very happy that the Nation's Capital City has been saved from suffering the disgrace of having no air-mail service and no passenger transport service."

"I believe the people of the Nation would censure all of us having any connection with this matter, if we had failed to prevent such a catastrophe. For the most powerful Nation in the world to have no air service at its Capital City would be more than a mere reflection. Being well acquainted with the Templehoff in Berlin, Le Bourget in Paris and Croyden Field in London, I am jealous for our Nation's Capital to have quite soon a comparable airport, and certainly to be cut off from air communication would be a fatal blow to the proper pride of our people, and a serious inconvenience to the business public."

New Complications.

The House yesterday passed with little difficulty the sixth draft of a resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to close Military road or to erect suitable safeguards, but the action was an empty gesture in view of developments downtown.

Further complicating the already entangled issue, the Senate Military Affairs Committee raised the question whether Virginia might not have a prescriptive right in the road after all by virture of using it 20-odd years.

Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, said that question

Two Plead Guilty of Pulling Fire Alarm Boxes; Senator Is Interested, They Are Released—Innocent Boy Is Kept in Jail for Five Months.

RESPONSIBLE for the worst epidemic of false alarms in the history of the Washington Fire Department, Adams Martin Wyant, jr., 2311 Connecticut avenue, son of late Representative Wyant, of Pennsylvania, and Waldron W. Whitehead, 18, of 3016 Tilden street northwest, escaped jail sentence, it was learned yesterday.

Thursday afternoon, two days before the scheduled date for the sentencing, Police Judge Isaac R. Hitt, in an empty court, took their personal bond in six of the cases and suspended a $40 fine in the seventh. Assistant Corporation Counsel James W. Lauderdale, in charge of the case, said "I was not notified of the proceedings."

On January 24, while the streets were covered with ice, the youths turned in 29 false alarms that sent fire apparatus skidding throughout the Northwest section, police said. When arraigned January 27, the youths pleaded not guilty and demanded a jury trial. Later they agreed to plead guilty to seven charges and the remaining 22 were dropped, after an airing in the corporation counsel's office.

On each of the papers in the case appeared the notation written in ink "Senator Davis interested." February 7, the day the boys entered the plea of guilty, Senator James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, appeared in Police Court "on a tour of inspection," he said. He was closeted with Judge Hitt for 15 minutes.

The maximum sentence the boys could have received was $500 or six months in jail, or both for each charge. Walter Monroe, colored, was given ten years in 1932 for turning in ten false alarms when he was unable to pay the fine and given six additional

SINCE September 30, 1935, a 21-year-old youth has languished in a cell at the District Jail, accused of a crime he knew nothing about.

Since his commitment, records of the case have been buried in files of the United States attorney's office in District Supreme Court.

Repeatedly the youth insisted he was innocent and pleaded for freedom. Day after day—for five months—he was forced to accept punishment for his alleged "misdeed."

He was under indictment by a District grand jury on charges of grand larceny. Yet, during testimony before the grand jury, the arresting officer recommended the youth be freed.

"He doesn't know a thing about it—he is innocent of the whole thing," said the officer.

Yesterday, the youth was released. Charges against him were nolle prossed—dismissed. This was done less than half an hour after The Post assigned a reporter to investigate the case.

The youth was returned home, ready once more to contribute to the support of his elderly mother and family. For many months they had been deprived of this help.

On the night of September 21, 1935, Rudolph Pediford, colored, of 2922 Sherman avenue northwest, was invited by a friend to take an automobile trip to Baltimore.

The friend failed to tell Pediford that the vehicle they were to use was stolen.

Potomac Flood Fears Allayed; Ice Still Holds

Weather Bureau Sees Little Danger Today; Thaw Fills City Basements.

Fears of an immediate flood by the ice-locked Potomac River were allayed by the Weather Bureau last night, although the temperature yesterday mounted to its highest point in many days—39 at 4 p. m.—and firemen and workers from the Sewer Department were kept busy pumping water caused by thawing snow from hundreds of basements in low-lying sections of the city.

As the melting snow and accumulated rain water brought discomfort and distress to many District residents, the rivers and floods division reported the ice was holding on the upper Potomac, and that there was no possibility of a general flood for the next 36 hours at least.

River men were anxious at Harpers Ferry, however. Special observers sent by the Weather Bureau along the river at various points reported the rise in the clogged waters had not exceeded a foot.

Rise Is Slight.

"There has been rain over the entire Potomac Basin," a statement issued by the Weather Bureau yesterday pointed out.

"Information from the basin above Washington is scant, but the few reports received indicate that there is still a heavy covering of snow and the runoff is not as great as might have been expected from the rain. The streams are rising very slowly and the ice is softening, but there have been no movements of ice.

"It is not expected that the temperature will be high enough and the precipitation heavy enough in the next 36 to 48 hours to cause a general flood; nor is it expected that there will be any general movement of ice in the next 36 hours, but nothing definite can be said of the ice except that when it does break up it will jam in places and cause local flooding. Where these jams will occur it is impossible to say."

Statler Case Jury Retires for Night

Carthage, N. C., Feb. 14 (AP).—The jury in the Statler-Davidson $560,000 will case, having failed to reach a verdict after an hour and a half's deliberation, was sent to bed at 8:30 o'clock tonight under instructions to resume consideration of the case tomorrow morning.

The jury received the case, involving the estate of the late Elva Statler Davidson, shortly after 6 p. m.

After a day of arguments by counsel, Judge Don Phillips charged the jury that there were only two issues—whether Mrs. Davidson was unduly influenced by H. Bradley Davidson, jr., her husband, and W. Barton Leach, of the Harvard Law School, her counselor; and whether the document produced in court actually was the last will made by her.

Willard Hotel Blaze Ties Up Avenue Traffic

Small Storeroom Fire Fails to Stop Dance on Tenth Floor.

Hundreds of persons were attracted to Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, last night by a small fire on the ninth floor of the Willard Hotel.

Dozens of engines and other apparatus responded to the three alarms. A traffic snarl which resulted was so severe the last fire engines to arrive were forced to traverse the wrong side of the avenue.

From the outside, the fire appeared to be serious as smoke billowed from upper windows.

Inside, however, only one stream of water was required to extinguish the flames in a 30-foot square storage room filled with mattresses. Firemen removed the water-soaked mattresses.

A dance of the Pennsylvania State Society was in progress in the tenth floor ballroom when a bellboy discovered the fire.

Phil Lampkin's orchestra struck up, "The Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," and the dance went on.

Robert P. Smith, lawyer and society president, was unable to resist the urge to go to the fire. Representatives Robert F. Rich and J. Buell Snyder, society guests, remained in the ballroom.

As rooms are seldom rented on the ninth floor because of the proximity of the ballroom, there were no guests there.

Effort to Blow Up Rocket Ship Fails

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

New York, Feb. 14.—Fridolph W. Kessler, president of the Rocket Airplane Corporation of America, tonight revealed an attempt to blow up the rocket mail plane at Greenwood Lake last Sunday which, had it succeeded, might have resulted in killing several persons. Sabotage prevented the rocket from flying, he said.

Kessler said all the fuel pipes had been twisted at right angles in the rocket and that only "a miracle" prevented the powerful fuel mixture of liquid oxygen from exploding. He blamed the sabotage on a mechanic, who reportedly confessed.

"This mechanic was jealous," Kessler said. "He had a part in constructing the rocket designed by Dr. Alexander Klemin, of the Guggenheim Institute of Aeronautics. He told me he wanted to get all the credit for building the plane and when the newspapers began to favor others, he decided to prevent the flight."

Yacht Found Safe After Race Scare

Miami, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—The Ketch Caroline, missing entrant in the Miami-Nassau international sailing race, was found safe today following a search by Coast Guard planes and patrol boats.

Coast Guard Amphibian 155 radioed its base here the 37-foot yacht, owned and sailed by Harold Bowen, of Grants Mill, R. I., had been located in New Providence Channel, a half-mile off one of the low-lying islands in the Bahama group.

Lieut. G. H. Bowerman, pilot, advised all aboard apparently were well.

The Caroline had been unsighted since starting the race Tuesday off Miami Beach.

Ruling Gives Veterans U.S. Job Priority

Ex-Service Man's Suit Threatens to Cripple 'Security' Program.

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, Feb. 14.—American war veterans tonight saw a new hope for work in the ruling of Federal Judge George A. Welsh that President Roosevelt's order giving preference to persons on relief rolls for work on PWA, WPA and other "Government projects" was invalid.

The ruling handed down held that veterans' preference laws, enacted by Congress in 1899 and 1919, were violated by the Executive order. Veterans, their wives or widows are given preferential status under the law.

Far-Reaching Phases.

The court ruled:

1. That any veteran, presenting himself with an honorable discharge, shall be given work on any of the projects under the $4,000,000,000 work-relief program, except road-building.

2. That similar preference be given to a wife or a widow of a veteran.

3. That where one or more veterans apply for work and there are no jobs available, non-veterans working must be laid off and the jobs given to the former service men, provided the veteran is physically qualified for the job.

Coincident with handing down the ruling, Judge Welsh issued an order restraining officials of the Business Census, a WPA project, from compensating workers or employing others until any applicants who are former service men, honorably discharged, have been put to work.

The decision was filed immediately, the clerk of the court said, complicating matters for WPA workers here.

Appeal to Be Taken.

Thomas J. Curtin, United States Attorney here, would be instructed immediately, it was indicated, to appeal the ruling to the Circuit Court of Appeals. If that appellate body upholds Judge Welsh, the case is to be carried to the Supreme Court.

The far-reaching ruling was handed down in a suit filed by Benjamin J. Spang, Philadelphia World War veteran and widower, who charged that he had been denied work on the business census last May because his name was not on local county relief rolls.

Judge Welsh made it clear that it was not his intention to stop work-relief projects. His decision, he said, was that veterans, and their wives or widows, must be given preference on Government work over all others, and that officials in charge of the projects would be expected to obey the court's mandate.

In the course of his opinion, Judge Welsh said that "the preferential status given to veterans is not to be considered in the nature of a gratuity," but as something "conferred by an appreciative Government upon men (and women) who had rallied to their country's service in wars in behalf of American ideals and aspirations."

Relief Program Threatened.

Senate Chiefs Assail Court's AAA Decision

Join Norris in Attack on Highest Tribunal in Farm Bill Debate.

Arbitrary, Says Robinson; McAdoo Rises as Only Defender.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate's Democratic leadership yesterday joined George W. Norris, Nebraska liberal, in another tirade against the Supreme Court's AAA decision, as the Administration's substitute farm program moved toward certain Senate passage, probably early today.

Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson bluntly charged the Supreme Court acted "arbitrarily" in invalidating the AAA. The heavy-voiced, broad-waisted Arkansan, who reputedly aspires to sit on the highest bench, declared the court proceeded on "assumptions of fact, unwarranted by the record, and unwarranted to general opinion."

Progress Is Hampered.

Only one Democratic voice was raised in defense of the Court, as the debate swung away from the substitute farm bill—that of William Gibbs McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury in Wilson's Cabinet, who vigorously denounced the Norris proposal to require unanimous Court opinions.

The unexpected digression slowed down consideration of the new farm bill. The final vote will probably be forced over today, when the Senate will meet an hour early, to speed enactment. Speaker Byrns indicated the House will not call up the measure until midweek.

All important amendments except two went down to crushing defeat, as the Senate, proceeding under a strict debate limitation, pressed the measure toward passage. One amendment, by Senator M. M. Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, was adopted by a voice vote. It added a new "purpose" to the bill, which the Kentuckian insisted enhanced its constitutional chances, but which carried the program into a broad new field of potential expenditures.

"The protection of rivers and harbors against the results of soil erosion, in aid of maintaining the navigability of waters and water courses, and in aid of flood control."

Spending Power Curtailed.

The wide open authority for Wallace to spend virtually as he pleases in administering the program, was curtailed somewhat by a "clarifying" amendment, offered by Senator James R. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina. As adopted by the Senate, this amendment still would permit Wallace to judge "facts constituting the bases for any payment or grant," but would leave Comptroller J. R. McCarl still judge of the law.

Among defeated amendments was one by Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), Texas, offering the debenture plan as a supplement to the program, voted down 42 to 32, and another by Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, seeking to establish a ratio between farm and other-than-farm income,

Mob Pillages Venezuela City; Four Killed by Soldiers' Fire

By the United Press.

Caracas, Venezuela, Feb. 14.—Marching, shouting crowds of inflamed patriots went through this beautiful tropical capital tonight, burning and pillaging, indignant at the slaughter by government troops today of four demonstrators and the wounding of 25 others at Plaza Bolivar.

Angry mobs, which saw their comrades fall before a fusillade from the balconies of the government palace, marched through the streets shouting demands for justice and liberty and threatening further disorders.

The shooting occurred during a demonstration at Plaza Bolivar, facing the government palace. The demonstration was called in sympathy with the newspapers of Venezuela, which recently went on strike and suspended publication in protest against censorship rules, which editors say are merely a continuation of the "press-gag" system set up by the late Juan Vicente Gomez, iron-fisted dictator.

As the mob surged toward the palace—on whose balconies were scores of soldiers—the order to fire was given. Four demonstrators were killed outright. Many others fell wounded. The mob scattered.

Palace gates were opened immediately and truck loads of troops poured out to take strategic stations throughout the city.

A few demonstrators returned to the plaza, to look after their dead and wounded.

With hands dripping blood, they returned to their comrades and renewed the demonstration—this time mainly against Gov. Galavis, who issued the order curtailing freedom of the press. With the blood of the victims of this morning's shootings, they wrote, "Down with Galavis" on the walls of government buildings.

Placards, some with bloody handprints on them, were hoisted, demanding punishment of those responsible for shooting into a defenseless crowd.

The mob marched to Gov. Galavis' home. It was met by a detachment of troops with drawn bayonets. But before the soldiers could act, the demonstrators set fire to the governor's automobile.

The infuriated mob then proceeded to a lumber yard owned by Galavis and fired it. En route, the demonstrators sacked the home of Vicenzio Perezsota, former governor of Zulia State, who was replaced today by Nestor Luis Perez.

Another mob of 1,000 paraded carrying flags and pictures of Simon Bolivar, the great liberator, and singing liberty songs. Members of the Patriotic Party organized and led this popular movement.

In hope of quieting the public, the government displaced Galavis and named Gen. Elbano Mivelli governor of the district.

The poet Andres Eloy, addressing a crowd, urged Venezuelans to fight against any new attempt to establish a dictatorship or tyranny.

"The liquidation of an old account has begun," he said. "If it is necessary to go to Rotunda or Castillo (famous prisons for political offenders), we will go before permitting a new tyranny to rule Venezuela.

"But I promise that Gen. Lopez Contreras will punish whoever is

House Votes Army Bill Totaling $545,226,318, Record for Peace Time

Burke Is Appointed to Succeed Mooney as Capital Postmaster

Farley Aid Takes Post April 1; Predecessor to Be Assistant.

Vincent C. Burke, a career man, Deputy First Assistant Postmaster General, has been appointed postmaster for Washington.

He will take office April 1, succeeding Postmaster William M. Mooney.

Postmaster General James A. Farley announced Burke's appointment last night, and at the same time made it known Mooney would remain as assistant postmaster here.

Burke is a native of Louisville, Ky., and has been in the postal service 30 years. He began as a clerk in the Louisville postoffice in 1906. On January 6, 1914, he was appointed a postoffice inspector, in which capacity he served until 1918, when he was made cashier in the Louisville postoffice.

On July 11, 1922, Burke returned to the inspection service, and remained there until promoted in 1933 to be Deputy First Assistant Postmaster General.

Postmaster General Farley, in announcing Burke's appointment, said:

"In selecting a new postmaster for the District of Columbia I have taken one of the most available men in the postal service, and one that I am sure is qualified in every respect to render the highest type of service to the citizens of the Nation's Capital.

Money Is Allotted For 565 Airplanes

Enlistment to 150,000 Aim; Added Defense in West Planned.

By the Associated Press.

A peace-time record Army appropriation bill carrying $376,866,333 for military purposes and $168,359,985 for rivers and harbors work was passed by the House yesterday and sent to the Senate. The vote was 204 to 36.

The $545,226,318 total, however, did not include additional contract authorizations of $10,669,786, reappropriation of $2,845,925 from unexpended previous appropriations and $285,000 in purchase-of-discharge funds, bringing the available total to the War Department for the 1937 fiscal year to $559,027,029, of which $390,667,044 is for military expenditures.

Extra Sum Voted.

Immediately before the final ballot, the House voted to add $1,584,812 to the sum previously provided for purely military purposes. This was accomplished through an amendment by Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, of the Military Committee, to give a year's reserve training to 1,000 R. O. T. C. graduates annually and place 50 of the 1,000 in active Army service.

Representative Woodrum (Democrat), Virginia, of the Appropriations Committee, which had refused the allowance, asserted that "the President doesn't want it." Representative Dockweiler (Democrat), California, of the same committee, said it was equivalent to spending $40,000 each to provide the half hundred more officers. Nevertheless, the House responded to the pleas of the well-organized McSwain bloc with a vote for the additional money.

Finished with the always prickly task of approving, item by item, the appropriations for strictly military purposes, the House went plodding through the measure's second section, providing $168,359,985 for rivers and harbors and flood control work.

Navy Planes Provided.

The big bill, before the House continuously since last Monday, would give the Army 565 new airplanes, provide that its enlisted strength be brought up to at least 150,000 men by June 30, 1937, and allow $8,000,000 for new defense expenditures on the West Coast, in Hawaii and at Panama.

The temper of the House in favor of what proponents called "adequate national defense," was evidenced repeatedly. Thus, when Representative Zioncheck (Democrat), Washington, sought to trim the National Guard's $10,034,915 allotment to $6,887,638, charging it was "a strike-breaking organization," his amendment was shouted down without even a standing vote. The guard would be provided 5,000 more men and given other increase in equipment and the like.

With the same precision, a proposal by Representative Marcantonio (Republican), New York, to prohibit expenditure of Reserve Officer Training Corps funds by grant colleges for compulsory military training was rejected, with only 15 supporting it to 88 opposing. Marcantonio warned against the day when, he said, the goosestep would be heard on the college campuses.

Funds Lacking To Give Nurses An 8-Hour Day

Health Mass Meeting Set Tomorrow; Appeals on Radio Tonight.

While plans went forward for tomorrow's mass meeting, and the Blanton subcommittee completed its hearings of municipal officials on the public health situation, interest of Representative Mary T. Norton in establishment of an eight-hour day for student nurses at Gallinger Hospital came to the fore yesterday.

Several civic leaders will make radio talks tonight to urge attendance at the mass meeting, scheduled for 3 p. m., in Central High School auditorium, it was announced by the District Medical Society, which is sponsoring the assembly.

They include John Saul, Dr. Prentiss Wilson, Thomas E. Lodge, Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, John Locher and others. The addresses will be at 7 p. m. over Station WRC.

Brightwood Group Concurs.

Meeting last night in Paul Junior High School, the Brightwood Citizens' Association adopted a resolution indorsing the holding of the mass meeting, and approved the stand taken by the District Medical Society," in its efforts to secure sadly needed increases in health appropriations for the District of Columbia."

Meanwhile, scores of private physicians, social workers and others who are concerned over the insufficiency of funds for health work are expected to appear before the appropriations subcommittee at 2 p. m. today, the time set aside for individual residents and representatives of citizens' associations.

Mrs. Norton, who is chairman of the House District committee, made public a letter from Elwood Street, director of public welfare, in which he said that funds requested to permit an eight-hour day for Gallinger nurses have repeatedly been denied.

Dated February 13, the letter follows:

"Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of Gallinger Municipal Hospital, has referred to me your letter of January 31 in which you inquire as to whether or not he will lend his support to an 8-hour day for the nurses under his jurisdiction.

Swanson Condition Slightly Improved

"If there has been any change in Secretary Swanson's condition it has been a slight improvement," was the bulletin issued last night from the Naval Hospital where the veteran Cabinet member lies gravely ill.

"Mr. Swanson has had a comfortable day," Capt. G. C. Thomas, officer in charge of the Naval Hospital, reported.

"There really has been very little change in his condition, which remains serious," he added.

During the day Mrs. Swanson paid a visit to her husband's bedside. The only other caller was Henry L. Roosevelt, who is serving as Acting Secretary of the Navy during his superior's illness.

Swanson is suffering from pleurisy which developed after he fell and suffered a broken rib at his home February 5.

U.S. Housing Disagreements Muddle Plans

By Felix Bruner.

Lack of co-ordination in Government housing activities yesterday was evidenced by confusion in the Administration housing program to the point where it was impossible to determine exactly what it contemplates or to predict the form it will eventually take.

In some quarters it was indicated that there had been no agreement on a housing program.

President Roosevelt in his press conference said that the discussion of housing in a White House meeting Thursday, after which Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, indicated that the President had approved a plan, had been only of a preliminary nature. It was indicated that the persons who attended the conference—President Roosevelt, Secretary Morgenthau, Wagner, and Peter Grimm, Treasury housing expert—had not agreed upon a plan.

Senator Wagner said he had the President's approval of his proposal to go ahead with a bill, that the bill would provide for Government assistance in construction of low-cost housing, and that he was determined to push his plan to increase FHA insurance of home mortgages from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the appraised value of homes.

At the Federal Housing Administration, opposition to the 90 per cent provision was expressed on the grounds that banks would not be interested in such loans and that State laws prohibited them.

In other Government quarters it was predicted that Senator Wagner's estimate that slum clearance funds for one year would be "less than $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 would be proved too high by $200,-

Plane Forced Down At Sea Taxies to Aid

San Diego, Calif., Feb. 14 (AP).—A disabled naval plane, catapulted from a battleship, taxied down the Pacific Ocean, north of here, 5 miles an hour today to meet a Coast Guard cutter steaming to its rescue.

It was one of the spotting planes from the flagship of the United States fleet, Dreadnaught New Mexico.

Lieut. F. Funke, jr., pilot, encountered engine trouble as he was flying from the New Mexico at Los Angeles Harbor to the naval air station here. He alighted on the ocean and despite heavy seas, kept the tiny craft afloat, got the engine started and set a southeast course, off Encinitas, a few miles from shore.

A companion plane radioed a call for assistance, then came down alongside prepared to pick up Funke and his mechanic if the plane started to go down.

Mary Astor, 11 Film Players, Ill of Flu

Tahoe City, Calif., Feb. 14 (AP).—An ambulance carried Mary Astor, film actress, 30 miles through the blizzard-swept Sierra Nevada today after storm and influenza broke up a motion-picture location camp of 150 persons.

The actress, ill of influenza, was taken from the camp location at Brockway, on Lake Tahoe, 15 miles north of here, to Truckee, Calif., to catch a Hollywood-bound train late tonight. Dr. Herbert Beberman, film company physician, who was also treating 11 other members of the company ill with influenza and colds, insisted Miss Astor's condition was not serious.

The others of the film company decided to head back to Hollywood on the train.

Miss Astor, Elliott Nugent, director, and ten others of the company became ill Wednesday. Snow had been falling for days and roads out of Brockway became impassable.

Byrnes Offers Plan to Provide Cash for Bonus

Amendment to Offices Bill Would Require No Taxes, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, introduced an amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill yesterday to provide $1,746,000,000 to cash the bonus, and at the same time forecast it would not require new taxes.

The amendment was prepared by Byrnes after consultation with the executive department under instructions from the Appropriations Committee. He will ask for its approval next week when the offices bill comes before the Senate.

The Senator at the same time stated the only additional cost to the Treasury would be the interest on the money and added: "It is not necessary to levy additional taxes for the amount of the interest on such obligations."

The $1,746,000,000 will be sufficient, Byrnes said, together with the $254,000,000 now in the adjusted service certificate fund, to pay in full every outstanding bonus certificate.

He forecast, however, that during the next fiscal year much less than $1,000,000,000 worth of the certificates would be cashed. The entire amount should be appropriated, he added, at the request of the Treasury which held that bonds payable on demand should not be issued without authority to cash them.

In addition to appropriating the cash, the Byrnes amendment would transfer $507,000,000 in bonds to the United States Government life insurance fund to repay loans on bonus certificates.

Meanwhile, a new drive for inflation developed in the House when Representative Patton (Democrat), Texas, filed a petition to force a vote on his new money plan for paying the bonus.

That action followed a circular letter Patman distributed to all House members, asking them to jot down their signatures at once if they favored meeting the bonus cost in new currency.

The petition would require 218 names. House leaders said they were confident it would not get that many. Even some of Patman's supporters conceded they might meet defeat unless the Administration asks for new taxes to finance the bonus.

The petition would take from the Rules Committee and onto the floor a rule that would permit immediate consideration of legislation providing for redemption in new currency of the bonds issued to veterans in payment of their adjusted service certificates.

Patman said he planned to propose payment in United States notes issued under the Thomas amendment to the AAA act, which authorized the President to print $3,000,000,000 of new money. But he added, the rule would make any other proposition in order.

Twenty names were reported on the Patman petition when the House adjourned.

While Patman launched the new inflation drive, signatures dropped from 213 to 209 on the petition to force a vote on the Frazier-Lemke financing farm bill. The total required is 218.

Representative Boland, Democratic House whip, said the petition was "dead."

At his press conference yesterday, President Roosevelt turned aside all inquiries as to details of his tax plans, with the assertion he hoped to finish work on them next week.

House spokesmen said they thought the delay might be occasioned by mechanical difficulties of working out the intricacies of tax legislation. Unofficial suggestions arose that it might be due to a desire to withhold any plan for financing the new farm bill until Congress has acted on that measure.

Politics and People

Senator Wagner Pulls False Whiskers off Actors in the New Deal 'Economy Drama.'

By Franklyn Waltman

LACK of co-ordination in New Deal administration has been so prevalent that it has come to be accepted as a customary evil of the present regime. But in politics the New Deal seemed to excel at co-ordinating its activities—until the last day or two.

For the last 10 days or two weeks President Roosevelt has been presenting a political drama which might be called "Economy," or "Efforts Toward a Balanced Budget." First he explained that $1,000,000,000 in unneeded authorizations for lending agencies would be canceled. Although such action did not mean a thing in connection with restricting expenditures or curbing the deficit, it was heralded in large type in the newspapers next day.

The impression given was that President Roosevelt had turned to the right and was beginning to economize. Several days later the President revealed he was having a "clean-up" made on all Federal expenditures. Then it was announced that funds allocated to certain New Deal work relief agencies would be restricted in order to supply more money for WPA. If that meant anything it meant that money would be taken from useful projects to be used for Harry Hopkins' boondoggling. But it looked like economy.

Then there was another announcement from the White House to the effect that the surveys started were proceeding along three broad lines, namely: Cancellation of unneeded authorizations; cutting of appropriations and authorization which would effect a reduction in the public debt and consideration of appropriations which will have an effect upon the budget or the current deficit.

So far not a cent has been cut out of the budget. On the other hand, the total of that document, not alone for the current fiscal year, but also for the year which starts July 1, has been growing and none knows what the deficits for the two years finally will be. Nobody familiar with the situation has been fooled, but there is no doubt that it all has gone to create an economical thrifty atmosphere around the White House.

And then Senator Robert F. Wagner gave away the whole act—he pulled the false whiskers off the actors. Being an intelligent man, Senator Wagner knows that it costs money and more money if you want to clear slums and do all the things that New Dealers think necessary to give us the "more abundant life." Being forthright, he says what he thinks.

Leaving the White House after a conference on housing, which now appears to have created a more muddled situation than existed before in the program, Senator Wagner said that less than $400,000,000 would be appropriated for slum-clearance. A moment later he amended the figure to less than $300,000,000 and finally said about $250,000,000. He did not come down on that figure. So the newspapermen wrote stories about a slum-clearance program costing between $250,000,000 and $400,000,000.

And there yesterday morning was the stark news on the front page of everybody's newspaper reporting that the New Deal was getting ready to spend several hundred million dollars on slum clearance! What kind of economy is that? How can you balance a budget doing that sort of thing? It can be imagined the average reader asked. At lease it appears the White House political advisers believed that was the reaction, for in no time the word was given out that nothing had been decided at the conference. No, sir; nothing at all was decided, it was said, even though Senator Wagner, with the Administration's representative at his elbow the previous evening, had explained the program had been determined on and would be pressed.

The mistake, it seems, was that someone forgot to tell Senator Wagner that the economy drama was still being played. Senator Wagner should not have spoken about the sum involved—just talked about the more abundant life, leaving the impression that slums can be cleared with whiffle feathers.

Political co-ordination among the New Dealers also seems to have slipped in regard to the party's attitude toward the Supreme Court and Constitution. Democratic Floor Leader Joe Robinson set in motion a series of reports that at last the Administration was about to launch its fight on the Supreme Court when he arose in the Senate and rather sternly reprimanded the court for arbitrarily adopting opinions about the AAA and whether agriculture is local or national in its nature.

But such reports are wrong. Senator Robinson was speaking only for himself. President Roosevelt, it is understood, previously had sent word to his leaders who would handle directly any legislation designed to restrict the Supreme Court to layoff, at least, for the present.

It is also reported that an enthusiastic young New Dealer—a lawyer in a leading agency who has played an important part in drafting several controversial pieces of legislation—was prepared to set in motion agitation for placing restrictions on the high tribunal by Congressional act. But he was pulled up short in a high quarter with the explanation that it was not yet clear whether the country would stand for curtailing the Supreme Court's power.

Perhaps Senator Robinson, when he joined Senator Geroge W. Norris in the debate over the Supreme Court, was engaging only in educating the country up what a Constitution and Supreme Court should be. But, again, it may be that some one forgot to tell him that the Administration was not yet ready to go in that direction.

A.F.L. Members Urged to Insist On Higher Pay

Organization Says Increase in Purchasing Power Is Vital to Recovery.

A prediction that industrial activity will resume its upward swing by March was made yesterday by the American Federation of Labor in its monthly business survey.

The present "slight check in the progress of recovery" was attributed to the fact that is purchasing power lagging behind production. Unless this is corrected, the survey said, recovery will have a "serious set-back later on."

The federation urged its members to demand higher wages as a means of increasing purchasing power and thus continuing the advance in business and industrial activity.

"Business is expected to hold a level about 10 per cent above last year," the survey said. "The building industry is a recovery leader this spring, with a $205,000,000 total of contracts in January, compared to $100,000,000 last year. Home building is 67 per cent above last year. Recovery here lifts the building materials industries; lumber production is 42 per cent above last year and cement 35 per cent higher.

Urges 'Balance.'

"In general, profits in the first quarter will be considerably above last year. This fact places on workers the obligation to demand higher wages if the balance between producing and consuming power is ever to be restored."

After claiming that 11,400,000 workers still were unemployed, the federation maintained that industry's failure to absorb those out of work was "bringing the Nation into a serious danger."

The uncertainty of profits, the federation maintained, was retarding the "producer goods" industries. "Also, such factors as fear of inflation, fear that Congress will pass laws regulating business or interfering with buiness, have all tended to delay purchases of producers goods," the survey added.

"As long as the profit motive, uncontrolled, dominates production, we must have business booms and depressions. For, in a time of high business activity, when profits are plentiful, thousands of business firms invest in equipment, creating a boom, intead of spreading their orders evenly over a period of years. The boom ends when orders drop off and depression follows.

"We have in America the strange paradox of an economic system equipped to produce a comfortable living standard for all, but unable to function. To study the means of making it function is one of labors foremost tasks today."

Measure for Protecting 'News Sources' Passed

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 14 (AP).—A bill to protect newspapermen's confidences was passed by the Kentucky Legislature today and sent to Gov. A. B. Chandler, who is expected to approve it.

The measure was sponsored by the Kentucky Press Associatoin after three newspapermen went to jail rather than violate what they considered a newspaper confidence.

Plans to Link U. S., Germany By Air Drawn

By the United Press.

Representatives of the American and German Governments last night concluded an agreement for reciprocal use of government air fields in a transatlantic air service between Germany and the United States.

The German Mission representing the Reich air ministry, ministry of posts and the Lufthansa Co., has been in Washington for the past week conferring with the Inter-Departmental Committee on Civil International Aviation.

The agreement was similar to one with the British concluded December 11 covering air service between this country and England.

It was understood that as a result of the agreement a number of experimental flights across the Atlantic will be undertaken immediately by German planes. The route of the proposed air service or the experimental flights was not revealed.

Conclusion of the agreement was announced by Assistant Secretary of State R. Walton Moore, chairman of the committee, in the following statement:

"Discussions with regard to the organization of air traffic which has taken place during the past week between representatives of the United States and a German delegation were satisfactorily concluded today and the following understanding reached:

"The Department of Commerce is prepared to make facilities under the control of the United States Government available to any German company or companies for use in carrying out experimental flights during 1936, the German air mission having offered to reciprocate in that respect through use of similar facilities under control of the German government.

"Based on the results of the experimental flights, both governments will consider possible methods of arranging for regular services.

6-Point Airway Program Given ByGuggenheim

Senators Absolve Official in Cutting Death; Safety Measures Stressed.

A six-point program for increasing the safety of aviation was received yesterday by the Senate Aircraft Committee from Col. Harry J. Guggenheim, former ambassador to Cuba.

Created as a result of the death of Senator Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico, in a plane crash last year, the committee, in addition questioned C. H. Jones, Commerce Department assistant Airways Keeper at Kirksville, Mo., but was unable to impeach his statement that he was on duty when the Cutting plane fell nearby.

No Case Against Keeper.

Chairman Copeland (Democrat), of New York, said, "So far as I can see, there is no testimony before the committee that Jones failed in his responsibility."

"I don't think they made any case against Jones," said Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri. "There is no evidence to sustain the proposition that he was not on the field."

Guggenheim's recommendations were:

1. Hearings on plane crash investigations be public.
2. Concentration by the Bureau of Air Commerce on "regulatory functions," rather than stimulation of new air devices.
3. The placing of control of air mail rates "in a body completely independent of political bias."
4. An expansion of the reporting service of the Weather Bureau.
5. A general development of airports as to facilities and number.
6. More aerial signposts to guide fliers.

Advocates Landing Strips.

"Commercial aviation in America is supreme," Guggenheim declared, adding that the need now is to accelerate the advance of private flying. He favored the idea of "landing strips" constructed along highways to serve as emergency landing fields.

Eugene L. Vidal, director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, defended the bureau policy of encouraging experimentation work in flying equipment, saying that "only a few thousand dollars" were involved.

"I object to that," said Guggenheim, explaining he thought such work should be left to private initiative. Guggenheim did not expand his thoughts concerning air mail rates except to say, "I am fundamentally opposed to subsidies. However, it seems that the air-mail operators need a leg up. There can't be any political bias. If there is, it means ruin for the splendid system created by private initiative."

Kerensky Aid Dies in Paris

Paris, Feb. 14 (AP).—Alexander Ivanovich Guchkoff, one-time president of the Imperial Russian Duma and a member of the delegation sent to ask Czar Nicholas to abdicate in 1917, died today at the age of 74. He was minister of war in the Kerensky government.

AAA Ruling Attacked

crushed 51 to 25. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Democrat), Michigan, vainly attempted to amend the Connally proposal to impose an embargo against foreign farm commodities competing with domestic products on which bounties are paid. This, too, was defeated 51 to 25.

Joining McAdoo in protest against the Norris proposal for unanimous court ruling on constitutional questions was Senator Lester J. Dickinson (Republican), Iowa, who said the question was not whether decisions should be 7 to 2 or unanimous, because "our government is one of majority rule, and a 5 to 4 verdict is a majority verdict."

"The question," Dickinson said, "is whether you are going to destroy representative government in this country."

Unanimous Ruling.

McAdoo declared there was no room for Robinson's comparison between the Supreme Court and a jury in a criminal case. He declared a requirement for unanimous rulings in overruling Congress "would be the most unfortunate thing that could happen in this country."

Said McAdoo:

"Suppose the Senator's suggestion were carried out, and Congress passed a law infringing anyone of the rights guaranteed in the first ten amendments, such as freedom of the press, or the right of trial by jury. If a unanimous decision were required to hold that act of Congress unconstitutional, then it would be possible for a single justice to destroy the right guaranteed by the Constitution.

"I am not in sympathy with the criticism of the Supreme Court. I look to it for the unimpaired preservation of constitutional government in this county. There must be a supreme judicial arbiter. It is essential that the rights of the States be preserved. Of course, majority decisions are unfortunate, but frequently majority actions of this body, and of the other legislative body, are unfortunate. Majority rule is the basis of our Government, and the Supreme Court is not subject to any legislative criticism."

Earlier in the day, Norris again had taken the floor to espouse his demand for unanimity in court opinions on constitutional questions, reiterating that any division in the court creates a "reasonable doubt."

If control of agriculture is turned back to the States, as it must be under the Supreme Court decision, the time will come, the Nebraskan asserted, "when we will be another China."

Here Senator Robinson broke into the debate, to observe that until the Supreme Court ruled on AAA, "no other authoritative body in this land had made a contention contrary to regarding it as of national concern."

"The assumption by the court, not based on any evidence in the record, that agriculture involves mere local problems, does not constitute a conclusion of law, which suggests itself as sound to very many lawyers," Robinson went on.

National Problem.

"In nearly all court decisions with which I am familiar, legislative findings of fact embraced in statutes are regarded by the courts as binding, and particularly when evidence involving the conclusion of fact is not to be found in the record."

During the Robinson discourse, Senator Norris frequently interposed to agree with his conclusions, and once suggested that "there was not only lack of evidence that it (agriculture) is a local problem, but no one had ever questioned up to that time that it was a national problem.

"It is a very exceptional thing," Senator Robinson said, "for a court, in a case where there is no evidence involving an issue of fact and in a case involving a statute, where the statute states a conclusion of fact by the legislative authority, for the court to go outside of its own record and reach a conclusion of fact at variance with that reached by the legislative authority.

"This is a feature of the decision of the Supreme Court, which, in my judgment, impeaches the value of the decision at law."

Robinson insisted the whole procedure of Government during the last 20 years has been based on the theory that agriculture is of general and national concern, so much so that "Congress and its committees have spent half their time trying to solve the problem."

Robinson continued:

"The purpose generally has been to give agriculture a status which would enable those who engaged in it to survive, because if it should fail as an industry the life of the Nation would end. Yet without a word in the record upon which to base such a finding, in contradiction of the whole theory of national legislation and action during the period since agriculture came into a position of distress great enough to attract the attention of he world, the Supreme Court arbitrarily. I respectfully suggest, said the control of agriculture or the maintenance of agriculture is a mere local matter in which the United States Government has no concern and over which it has no control. I submit that such assumptions of fact, unwarranted by the record and unwarranted by general opinion, raise in the mind of any man who studies the subject, a doubt as to the merits of the conclusion reached by the court."

Despite the agitation for statutory restrictions on the Supreme Court's normal functioning, or a constitutional amendment broadening legislative powers, it appeared unlikely that the Administration would press for any such change at this session of Congress. Some of the President's wisest Capitol counselors have advised him it might not be expedient to do so, and he is said to share their view.

The Senate Judiciary Committee, which has before it a half dozen proposals for changes in the court's structure, will meet Monday. It has been suggested that Senator Norris at that time may demand a vote on one or more of the proposals. Norris never has introduced in bill form his most recent proposal for unanimous court decisions, but in the committee's files is a proposed constitutional amendment by Norris, requiring a two-third majority on constitutional questions.

View on Issue.

Senator Henry F. Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, steadfastly refuses to express any view on the issue.

Outstanding in yesterday's farm bill debate was the fight for the Connally export-debenture plan, providing for Federal bounties on exports of farm products, equal to half the tariff on imports of the same products shipped abroad, and imposing specific rates on wheat, cotton, tobacco and rice.

Although a similar plan had been approved twice by the Senate in 1929, yesterday's vote polled only 16 Democrats, 14 Republicans, 1 Progressive and 1 Farmer-Laborite for it, while 40 Democrats, including Majority Leader Robinson, and two Republicans, voted "No."

The Senate planned to meet at 11 a. m. today to complete action on the bill, with the remaining battles centering around a complete Republican substitute, providing large Federal land purchases and increased tariffs, and a final Republican effort to send the bill back to committee. It appeared certain these would be defeated.

Veterans' Jobs

ects even though they may not be on relief, threatened the whole Administration relief program. Immediate steps will be taken by the Government to have the decision set aside.

The ruling came just at a time when Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress administrator, was considering means of taking off works-relief rolls veterans who will receive a bonus next summer.

Although there is nothing in the laws under which PWA operates that requires preference for veterans, the court held that failure to give them preference violated another statute which says that men who served in the World War must be given preference. The recovery act, under which PWA was roganized, does provide for preference for veterans.

Hopkins estimated, when he began consideration of the situation arising from the bonus payments, that 250,000 veterans were on WPA rolls. About 3,500,000 persons are employed under the relief program. There is about an equal number of former service men in the country, enough to take over the entire program.

Stay Will be Sought.

Immediately following receipt of news of the court decision, Corrington Gill, assistant WPA administrator, conferred with Justice Department officials. He pointed out that the court order would not be effective until next week and that 36,000 WPA workers in Philadelphia would receive their pay checks today.

It was expected that a motion for a stay of execution would immediately be filed by the Government. In event this motion is refused, Gill said, an immediate appeal would be taken to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Gill said that meanwhile, WPA would continue its policy of no discrimination.

A regulation laid down by Hopkins early in the works program said:

"There shall be no discrimination (in awarding WPA jobs) because of race, religion, color, noncitizenship, political office, or because of membership in any special group."

Aubrey Williams, acting WPA administrator, said that he "could not believe" the decision would hold up the entire works program.

Hiram Maxim Better.

La Junta, Colo., Feb. 14 (AP).—Hiram Percy Maxim, of Hartford, Conn., internationally known inventor, was slightly improved today at a La Junta Hospital. He is suffering from a serious throat infection, physicians said.

Housing Plans Muddled

000,000 or more. Wagner himself said the sum might be much less than indicated.

A question was even raised as to whether insurance of modernization and repair loans would be extended beyond April 1, when the present law applicable to such loans expires.

Senator Wagner's reference to the sum of $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 in discussing housing plans caused consternation in Administration quarters. President Roosevelt recently has been stressing his activities in the direction of Government economy. Provision for such a sum would throw the Administration economy program decidedly out of line.

Discussing the conference at the White House, Senator Wagner said yesterday:

"I couldn't make anything out of it except that the President is for a new housing program with legislation at this session."

He added that current estimates of the amount to be asked to assist communities in slum clearance may be very high.

"In fact," he said, "we may wind up with very little money for slum clearance."

Asked about the 90 per cent mortgage insurance provision, he said:

"I am determined upon it."

President Roosevelt is understood to have raised the question of how money could be obtained for slum clearance. One suggestion was that it could be obtained through the issuance of bonds of a separate Government corporation rather than through Treasury borrowing or taxes.

One matter appeared to be generally agreed upon, except possibly by the Public Works Administration Housing Division. This was that the Government itself should not continue construction and renting of houses.

It appeared to be agreed that building of low-cost houses and elimination of slums is an activity for which cities and States should be responsible. On the other hand, it was pointed out that most cities and States have no provisions for spending money for such a purpose and that many of them would have extreme difficulty in raising the money.

Wagner's plan calls for funds to be supplied local governmental units, on the basis of either loans or grants or both, to assist communities in building houses. It was agreed that the projects should no longer be initiated from Washington. No proportion of loans and grants to the total cost of the projects has been agreed upon.

Increase of insured mortgages to 90 per cent instead of the present 80 per cent of the appraised value of homes is expected to continue to be a highly controversial subject. While Senator Wagner and other advocates of the plan said they believed there would be no trouble in obtaining the co-operation of lending agencies, so long as the FHA insurance fund was back of the loans, others expressed doubts.

The principal difficulty in the way is the fact that no State at present will permit a bank to lend up to 90 per cent of the value of a piece of real estate. When the present FHA law was passed it was necessary to obtain State legislation to make the 80 per cent mortgage provision effective. Every State, except Georgia, enacted such a law. A 90 per cent provision would necessitate a change in the law of each of these States. Legislatures of only 11 States are in session this winter. Operation of such a law would be delayed a full year in other States, assuming that the Legislatures will agree to increasing the loan limitation.

Another objection to increasing the mortgage percentage comes from business interests who contend that the Government is insuring mortgages so far above the possibilities of other private business loans that the action constitutes unfair competition.

The first title will expire April 1 unless its provisions are continued by Congress. Because repair and modernization loans usually represent only a small proportion of the value of the property involved, some officials contend that insurance is not necessary, that lending agencies would be eager for the business even without Government guarantees.

Ex-President Machado Reported in Bermuda

Hamilton, Bermuda, Feb. 14 (AP).—Gerardo Machado, former president of Cuba, who is a political exile and fugitive from a murder charge, is now in Bermuda, it was reported tonight.

The former president upon a doctor's orders left the steamship Orbita yesterday and registered at a hotel here under his own name, these reports said. He was said to have boarded the vessel at La Rochelle, France, with Nassau as his destination. The one-time Cuban leader plans to stay in Bermuda until March 15, when he will proceed to the Bahamas, it was understood.

Unidentified Plane Seen Fighting Gale Over Cody

Cody, Wyo., Feb. 14 (AP).—An unidentified airplane tonight battled a raging blizzard and 20 below zero weather over Cody, as residents attempted to guide it to the local airport, 3 miles from town.

The ship first was heard roaring over the city at about 6 p. m. (Mountain Standard time) after circling several times, the sound of its motor faded, and it was not heard again for almost an hour. At approximately 7 p. m. it was heard again.

Residents fought their way through heavy snows to the airport, and circled the field with flares. Before the flares could be lighted, however, the sound of the unidentified plane again had vanished.

Wife Is Named Slayer of Heir In Suicide Pact

Englishwoman Given Blood Transfusion After Self-Inflicted Wound.

By the Associated Press.

Columbia, Mo., Feb. 14.—Mrs. Irene Freeman Phister, 23, an attractive Englishwoman, was named tonight by a coroner's jury as the St. Valentine's Day slayer of her American husband, Warren Thornton Phister, 24, son of a wealthy Kansas City insurance man.

Unaware of his death, Mrs. Phister was given a blood transfusion at a hospital for a self-inflicted bullet wound. She told police, who broke into their hotel room when attracted by screams, they had quarreled over low finances, but Mrs. Eleanor Lee, Phister's aunt, said tonight he "had money in the bank."

Mrs. Phister, the daughter of an English Army captain who died near the end of the World War, met Phister while he was in Paris on a world tour.

"It looks like a clear case of a suicide pact," Police Detective Frank Fenton had said after the shootings.

Phister, a University of Missouri sophomore, died a few hours after his screams and those of his wife caused police to break into their room early today. A guest in an adjoining room told officers the couple had quarreled bitterly for an hour before the shooting.

"My wife shot me," Phister was quoted by Officer Forrest Hartley as shouting when police broke in. He lay on a bed, a bullet wound in his abdomen.

"Oh," my darling husband," cried the young woman whom Phister married in 1931 in London. She was shot through the shoulder. A .44 caliber revolver, with two empty shells, was on the floor near Mrs. Phister.

Police said she admitted shooting herself with the second shot, adding—"who fired the first shot doesn't matter."

"It was not jealousy," she added. "It was the depression. We were short of money. Oh, dear, we were so short of money. I had planned to get a job to help out.

"She told Fenton they quarreled last night.

"Her husband family did not approve the marriage, but they became reconciled," she added.

"Of course, we've had in-lawish troubles."

Phister's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Laurance Phister, arrived from Kansas City shortly before their son died.

"You know more about this than I do," Phister, head of a large insurance agency, told questioners.

Young Phister previously had attended the University of Michigan. He came to enter the University of Missouri January 22.

Spain's Ex-Rulers Hail Grandchild

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Feb. 14.—Former King Alfonso and Queen Victoria of Spain separately celebrated tonight the arrival of their first grandchild, the new-born daughter of the Infanta Beatriz.

The girl was born early today at the Anglo-American Nursing Home. The former monarch's daughter was attended personally by her mother at the birth. Prince Alessandro Torlonia, the Infanta's husband, was at the hospital.

The baby is to be named Alessandra Victoria, after her father and grandmother.

Authorities said today's birth was the first occasion on which American blood had entered the veins of the Spanish royal family. Prince Torlonia, descended from an Italian nobleman, is the son of the former Elsie Moore, of New York.

Garey Recounts Fatal Tangier Trip Over Ice

Sergt. Hunter Died After Repeated Falls, Board Is Informed.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Feb. 14.—Maj. Enoch B. Garey, head of the Maryland State police, today told a State board in inquiry his story of the ill-fated rescue expedition which cost the life of Sergt. Wilbert V. Hunter, of the State police.

Hunter died on the ice some miles off Crisfield in a blizzard last Friday night as he and others led by Maj. Garey were attempting to drag sleighs of food to Tangier Island, Va., cut off from the mainland by ice. The board, named by Gov. Nice, will resume its hearings Tuesday at Crisfield.

Did Not Know Conditions.

The day before the rescue expedition, Maj. Garey led 29 watermen back to their homes on Tangier or Smith islands. He was asked today if he had not considered that taking the watermen home had not added "extra mouths" to be fed from depleted supplies.

The major replied that he did not know of conditions on the island until he arrived there with the fishermen. He added that he might have taken other action, had he known.

Speaking of the expedition, Garey told the board:

"With 16 volunteers, we started across the ice, hauling the food supplies in two sleighs. Some of the men were pushing and some were pulling on ropes. It was extremely cold and snowing hard.

"The going was very hard and several of the volunteers began to tire and I could tell that some desired turning back.

"We had progressed a little more than half way when I asked for volunteers to continue on the Coast Guard cutter Travis.

"Six of the men, including two of the officers, stepped forward immediately and we started on with the trip, the balance returning to Crisfield.

"After we had gone some distance, I found that Hunter and Richard McCready, of Crisfield, were getting fagged out.

Hunter Falls Through Ice.

"We were forced to stop from time to time to rest and then Hunter fell through the ice.

"He was holding onto the rope and the rest of the party had considerable difficulty pulling him out because clothes and boots were full of water.

"We started on again, but Hunter fell from time to time, and it soon became clear to me that he was completely exhausted, and McCready was not far behind.

"It became clear to me that it would be a long time before we reached the ship, if at all. I decided to leave Hunter and McCready, each with a man, and asked the others to go on to the ship with me for help.

"We could see flashlights, apparently on the ice, near the beam of a searchlight which we knew was from the ship, and I knew that men were coming to meet us.

"With my two companions, I continued until I met the coast guardsmen. It told them of our difficulties and one man turned back to lead us to the ship and the others traced our steps back to four men we had left behind.

"A little later on, the captain of the vessel reported that his men had returned with a report of the death of Sergt. Hunter. The body was later brought aboard the boat and I immediately notified the chief executive of the State.

"There was still the question of food for Tangier and at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, I wired, asking the help of Government agencies.

"A little later I learned that some important officers of the State had made arrangements with the National Guard and others to get some food to the island. I started to Norfolk on th Travis on Sunda to see what further arrangement I could make to get food supplies back.

Members of the board of inquiry are Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckford, Lieut. Col. Dwight Mohr, chief surgeon of the Baltimore Police Department; Alexander Armstrong, former State attorney general, and Col. Harry C. Jones, State employment commissioner.

Potomac Flood Fear Fades

are forecast for today. Tomorrow will be fair, it was predicted.

Throughout yesterday the slush poured its dregs from the snowdrifts. Street cleaners and PWA workers were stationed throughout the city to open up clogged gutters and sewer entrances.

Little concern over the situation was expressed by the Sewer Department. Officials said that the city's sewage system should be adequate to carry off the flood waters.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday issued orders to all officers and men in scout cars to observe any flood conditions in streets and report them to the Refuse Department.

While preparations have been made to throw up temporary dikes between Lincoln Memorial and the Monument Grounds, Army engineers for the District felt chances were excellent that this would be unnecessary.

In many quarters it was felt that if the cold weather continues the thaw will be gradual and the snow and ice will pass down the river to Chesapeake Bay without disastrous consequences.

Canal road was partly inundated by yesterday's flood. The water crept in basements and made the roadway a miniature river in spots. It reached the lowest steps of porches.

Turbulent, ice-jammed Rock Creek leaped over its banks in some places and partly submerged trees along its bed.

At Great Falls and Chain Bridge the water rose slightly and ice floes chunked against the span.

As dusk enveloped the city last night motorists and pedestrians sloshed through slush, which the Weather Bureau indicated probably would become ice by this morning.

In Hyattsville, Md., Mrs. Anne Seughor, 70, slipped and fell on the ice. Her right hip was fractured. She was taken to Casualty Hospital, where physicians said her condition was serious, due to her advanced age.

Midwest Hard Hit.

Rescue expeditions prepared for new attempts to reach snowbound communities in the Middle West last night as one of the severest cold waves of the winter swept eastward.

The Associated Press tabulated hundreds dead from storms throughout the northern hemisphere, while concern over the welfare of the residents of more than a dozen marooned South Dakota villages prompted formation of relief parties.

An airplane was equipped with skis at Belle Fourche, S. Dak., for an aerial survey of the isolated Meade County settlements, the Associated Press reported. Another group was ready to leave Newell to bring food and fuel to Fairpoint, Stoneville and tiny Red Owl.

At Bismarck, N. Dak., efforts were made to establish radio communication with Mud Butte, Maurine, Cedar Canyon, Fox Ridge, Opal, Royal Center, Fairpoint and Sulphur. No word has come to the cities from these towns since late in January.

Throughout the western part of South Dakota communication lines were down. A storm that was described in some places as the worst in 60 years tied up nearly all trains.

Cut off by the wind-driven snow were eight southern Minnesota communities. As the fuel shortage became more acute, more schools and public buildings were closed in Iowa. Practically all train service was halted and 75 per cent of trunk highways were impassable.

One train, carrying 30 passengers, was imprisoned in a 25-foot drift at New Hampton, while another, with 20 aboard, was stuck near Malvern.

Some of the minimum temperatures in the "cold capitals" of the Northwest were Custer, S. Dak., 44 below; Devils Lake, N. Dak., 40 below; Crookston, Minn., 35 below; Oakdale, Nebr., and Helena, Mont., 28 below, and Fort Dodge, Iowa, 20 below. From Canada to Oklahoma stretched the subzero belt. On its eastern invasion the frigid wave crossed the Mississippi.

Chicago was expecting an overnight low of 10 below. The Pacific Northwest was gripped by another cold wave, resulting in one death. Two died in traffic smashes along Iowa's road, and two fatalities and scores of injuries were reported as snow, rain and sleet fell in New York.

25,000 "Cleaning Up."

Up and down Manhattan a small army of 25,000 men, armed with shovels, cleaned the streets.

Across the sea's mountainous expanse fresh blizzards swept over Europe and Asia Minor, boosting the death toll to 275.

In Turkey alone 78 died, and property damage, according to the Associated Press, was estimated at $10,000,000.

On the other side of the world searchers recovered 150 bodies from slums destroyed by fire in Tientsin, China.

Europe's Toll Mounts.

London, Feb. 14 (AP).—Blizzard death tolls in Europe and the Near East mounted to almost 300 tonight as severe cold continued unabated in Bulgaria and Rumania, but softened to warmer weather elsewhere.

Bulgaria led the list of weather casualties, with more than 100 dead. Turkey followed, with at least 78 dead, of which a majority was frozen to death. Twenty-two others drowned and 8 died in accidents.

Italian authorities, checking up on blizzard fatalities, said the deaths might reach 40. Nearly 30 more died in Great Britain.

Crippled communication systems in many afflicted areas prevented accurate checks of life loss and property damage, although telegraph and telephone workers sprang into action as the gales subsided.

Il Duce's Sister-in-Law, 52, Succumbs in Rome

Rome, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Mrs. Augusta Mussolini, 52, sister-in-law of Premier Mussolini, died tonight.

Death was due indirectly to injuries suffered in a motor accident in 1926 which greatly under mined her strength.

She was the widow of Arnaldo Mussolini, Il Duce's younger brother, who died of heart disease.

$100,000 Asked For Developing New Aerial Gun

Army Has Plans for Rapid-Firing Cannon With 15,000-Ft. Range.

By the Associated Press.

To be prepared for future combat in the skies, the War Department has asked Congress for $100,000 for the development of a new, rapid-firing aerial cannon.

Specifications and blueprints already have been devised by Army ordnance engineers, it was learned yesterday, for a weapon of a caliber between the .50 Browning machine gun and the 37-millimeter infantry cannon.

Maj. Gen. W. H. Hschappat, chief ordance, expects the gun will shoot 15,000 feet into the air and, with a direct hit, bring down a plane.

Ordnance engineers said they had determined that it is technically possible to produce a gun of the type in question, and were confident the requested appropriation would result in an effective weapon.

The .50-caliber Browning machine gun, now used in American battleplanes, fires 200 to 400 shots per minute and will pierce the armor of any planes or tanks now in existence. However, it lacks the range needed for aerial combat or for use as an anti-aircraft weapon on the ground.

The 37-millimeter infantry cannon is an extremely accurate hand-loaded 1-pounder, but is too heavy for fast planes to carry and too large in caliber for quick-firing.

Ordnance engineers are now seeking to develop a gun which will combine the best features of the two and give the 9rmy a light weight, automatic weapon which will hurl a half of explosive shells from or at planes at increased distances.

Ordnance experts said yesterday that the British are now experimenting with new types of anti-tank guns but, so far as is known, have not a satisfactory weapon.

Doctor, Woman, Strangers, Both Claim Child in Court

Young Woman Declares She Boarded Boy, 3, at Physician's Home.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—Unconcernedly a blue-eyed baby boy gazed about a crowded courtroom today as Judge Rudolph De Short prepared for a Solomonic decree awarding his possession.

The infant sat on the lap of Dr. Gordon E. Mordoff, Wilmette obstetrician, while Miss Margaret Mann, 24, unmarried, began her fight to claim him.

The physician asserted the boy is his own son.

The comely young woman was equally insistent the child was hers.

Answering the questions of her attorney, Miss Mann, who recently was employed in a Loop department store, said the baby was born to her at St. Vincent's Orphanage May 19, 1932, and baptized Reginald Arthur Mann.

She explained she took him to the Mordoff home after reading an advertisement the doctor's wife—who died Monday—had inserted offering to board an infant.

She declined to divulge the name of her child's father, saying to interviewers:

"Please don't ask me. I refuse to implicate him."

Her counsel explained before the hearing opened that the man was married and had other children.

The gray-haired physician, who declared he has delivered 2,000 babies, insisted before the court session the lad was Gordon Mordoff 3d, born to his late wife in Minneapolis in 1932. Authorities there reported, however, their records did not disclose any child born to Mrs. Mordoff when she lived there.

The doctor denied he had ever seen the young woman before yesterday. Then he was taken in custody on a warrant charging technical kidnaping. The baby was removed from him by a bailiff, but returned later on order of Judge De Sort. The judge previously had awarded custody of the infant to the late Mrs. Mordoff on her petition for separate maintenance from the doctor. Miss Mann's action came before him on an intervening petition alleging maternity of the child.

Miss Mann asserted she had seen the child twice a week at the Mordoff home and declared she and Mrs. Mordoff had had an understanding that "if I married I was to have the child and that I was to get it any way this year when it became four years old."

"I am to be married soon and a home will be provided," she continued. She said the man whom she was to wed knew about the child, but that he was not its father.

Liggett Widow Denies Blaming Olson's Friends

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, Feb. 14.—Mrs. Walter Liggett widow of the slain newspaper publisher, testified today in District Court that she never accused "Gov. Floyd Olson's mob or gang" of shooting her husband.

Recalled as a rebuttal witness in the trial of (Kid Cann) Blumenfield, former bootlegger, charged with Liggett's assassination on December 9 last, the widow reiterated her previous assertion that "Kid Cann killed Walter."

"Did you ever, at any time, give a statement that it was some or any of Gov. Olson's mob or gang that killed your husband?" She was asked by Fred Pike, in charge of the prosecution.

"I didn't say it was Gov. Olson's mob that did the shooting," the witness responded.

"Did you ever at any time give a statement giving any other name than Kid Cann as the killer of your husband?"

"I did not."

In a previous session on the witness stand, Mrs. Liggett testified "Gov. Olson's gang either ordered or permitted the murder of my husband."

Before she left the stand today, Pike elicited a prompt "I did not" to his question as to whether she ever said Meyer Shuldberg killed her husband. Shuldberg, president of a Minneapolis liquor concern, was a defense witness. He employed Blumenfield as a salesman.

The witness was returned to the stand by the prosecution to combat efforts of Thomas McMeekin, chief defense counsel, to show from testimony of policemen and others near the scene when Liggett died, that his widow had said "Kid Cann or Gov. Olson's gang killed her husband."

Bible Lecture Series to Open At Auditorium

John Ford, noted Bible lecturer, who recently spoke for 30 Sunday nights to a total of 200,000 persons in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., will open a series of lectures tomorrow night in Bible Auditorium, Fifth and F streets northwest.

On his opening night he will give two lectures, speaking first at 7:30 and again at 9:15 o'clock. The local hall, which has a seating capacity of 1,200, has been remodeled and redecorated for the services, which will be continued through the week.

Ford's subject for both lectures Sunday night will be: "Heaven: Where and What Is?" Each service will be preceded by a half-hour's song service in which old-fashioned Gospel songs will be sung. Harry Gray, who has been with Ford for several years as his song leader, will be in charge during the Washington meetings, and has organized a choir of 100 voices to aid in the musical end of the services. He will have special musical features in connection with each night's program.

The outstanding music feature of both services Sunday night will be violin and viola duets by Milton Schwartz and George Wargo, members of the National Symphony Orchestra and the Washington String Quartet.

LANSING HATFIELD and Helen Ault are to be co-starred in a new network show, "Treasure Trails," to originate here in Washington and taking a debut bow tonight at 5:30, WMAL. It seems of peculiar importance since a network production from Washington, with music, is as rare as snowballs in July.

Of the hundreds of hours of programs originating in Washington studios of the two major networks, all but a fraction deal with the state of the nation or monologs by important personages. So far as I can recall, the fraction is so small a slide rule would be necessary for computation.

Miss Ault and Mr. Hatfield will be heard as Betty Adams and Ranger Bill Morrison in a 13-weeks series for the National Parks Service, Department of the Interior. The action takes place in Yosemite National Park with subsequent scenes in other parks. The program has plot.

Rudy Schramm's Orchestra forms the instrumental background for the production and leading roles will be played by a veteran cast of radio actors including Laura Staggers, Ann Ives, J. H. Hallock, Hall Hopper, John Shellie and Maurice Jarvis. Production, I imagine, is in the hands of Radio Associates.

For the last few weeks he has been announcing for WRC. Mr. Hunnicutt goes to WNOX, Knoxville, where he becomes promotion manager for the Knoxville News-Sentinel's radio activities. And everyone wishes him the very best of success.

Arthur Godfrey has hit on a plan to make 24 hours enough for his busy day. Arthur has decided he will begin work at midnight. By morning, and the hour for his "Sun Dial," he will have completed script and other preparations for his column of the air, the "Moon Dial" and the "Sun Dial." Immediately after the "Sun Dial" is off the air, he will take his eight hours for sleep and be up late in the afternoon refreshed and ready for the evening schedule of work. This little plan was formulated after he had worked until the small hours one night last week and left a coll for an hour to get him to the studio in time for the "Sun Dial." The next he knew it was 11 o'clock and the "Sun Dial" had come and gone without him.

Crowding Impedes Recovery of Patients

Physicians say that the curing of these tuberculous women is impeded by the ward crowding depicted. Treatment is complicated by the crowding and there is always danger that the more seriously ill patients will affect the condition of those on recovery's road. The scene is at the District Tuberculosis Hospital.

Health Mass Meeting Campaign Summarized Since Start, Feb. 7

Public Interest Aroused by Post Series on Need for Adequate Funds; Civic Groups and Members of Congress Join in Drive.

With health items trimmed deeply by the Bureau of the Budget, the 1937 District budget is now receiving Congressional consideration. The Washington Post desires that this city have the best health department in the Nation. This is one of a series of articles designed to show Congress the District's health needs.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Now that the public health officials and hospital superintendents have spoke before Senator Blanton's sub-committee, with citizens scheduled to be heard this afternoon and with a mass meeting on tomorrow's calendar, let us take stock of developments since the first installment of this series appeared a week ago yesterday.

Friday, February 7—Late in the day, Dr. Sterling Ruffin, president of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, resolves to call civic leaders to gether to decide upon the feasibility for hospital upkeep and expansion, tuberculosis care, shortage of personnel throughout the public health system and other conspicuous shortcomings—all due to lack of funds—but Dr. Ruffin's decision to urge a mass meeting is arrived at suddenly.

On the same day, Elwood Street, director of the Board of Public Welfare, reveals receipt of a report based on a survey of the Capity City School of Nursing at Gallinger Hospital, which concludes with the statement that provisional registration of the school by the Nurses Examining Board of the District of Columbia will be withdrawn on January 1, 1937, unless requirements are met in the meantime.

84 Hours on Night Duty.

The report brings out the following findings:

Student nurses at Gallinger Hospital average a 61-hour week on day duty, and an 84-hour week while on night duty, not including time for meals.

"The average ratio of students to patients on day of survey late last spring was 1 to 11 during the day and 1 to 30-plus at night."

Still quoting from the report:

"There were not enough mouthwash cups and tooth brushes on the surgical services, or thermometers on the male surgical ward. Many of the bath basins were being used for isolation technique on the female service so there were not sufficient on the ward. There were no bath blankets for bathing the patients; the bed blankets are used, or the bath towel.

"There was a feeling that the overcrowded conditions in this hospital were having a very detrimental effect on the attitude of many of the supervisors, particularly, in relation to the teaching and supervision of the students. It was remarked frequently that 'it is useless to expect the student to give good nursing care under such conditions. It can not be done.'

Gap in Teaching Cited.

"It is regrettable that due to the heavy teaching load of the instructors, they are unable to supervise the ward practise of the students to any appreciable extent, and as a result, there is a deplorable gap between theory and practise.

"* * * It is evident that standards required of accredited schools of nursing in the District are not being maintained, either as to the nursing care of the patients or the education of the student nurse. These two factors are absolutely inter-dependent—what affects one affects the other.

"As the health of the students is dependent upon proper working conditions and reasonable hours on duty, it is only to be expected that measures such as yearly physicals and X-rays of their chests, while desirable in themselves, will not materially improve the health of the students. The employment of additional personnel will no doubt reduce the number of days' illness."

Pending presentation of these facts to Congress, the nurses' examining board voted to extend provisional registration of the school until January 1. Failure to eliminate by then the deplorable conditions of which it complains will mean the end of Gallinger's nursing school, which, in turn, means the hospital will have to hire graduate nurses exclusively at prohibitive cost, or else close up shop.

Since the survey was made, the daily average of patients has increased from 741 to 915. Additions to the nursing staff during the same period have been negligible.

Mass Meeting Decided.

Saturday, February 8.—Committee assembled by Dr. Ruffin decides to call a mass meeting for Sunday, February 16.

Sunday, February 9—Health Officer George C. Ruhland says that the high death toll from pneumonia could be appreciably reduced if funds were granted his bacteriological laboratory to "type" the germs that cause this illness.

Monday, February 10—Representative Thomas L. Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of House sub-committee on District appropriations, expresses surprise that mass meeting is deemed necessary to discuss the health emergency.

Amplifying the remarks he made ina telephone conversation with Dr. Ruffin, Blanton tells reporters: "We are going to need a lot of help on the floor to get this budget through, and there are a lot of Congressmen who refuse to be bulldozed by any demand mass meeting." Medical Society announces mass meeting will be held at 3 p. m. Sunday in Central High School auditorium.

Tuesday, February 11—District Medical Society announces that the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, has accepted honorary chairmanship of mass meeting, and that the Rev. Dr. Abram Simon, of Washington Hebrew Congregation, will preside. Directors of the Washington Board of Trade indorse meeting and vote to send a representative delegation.

Wednesday, February 12—Report presented to heads of District hospitals and other institutions under the Board of Public Welfare shows that the veneral disease situation is becoming alarming as a result of the withholding of funds to combat the scourge. Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat) of New York, emphatically indorses fight for ample appropriations and praises mass meeting idea. Similar action taken by the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, Washington chapter of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, and by Thomas E. Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Blanton Thanks Society.

Thursday, February 13—Representative Blanton makes public letter of Dr. Ruffin thanking the District Medical Society for taking the burden of appropriating funds for health activities "off our shoulders." Requests Dr. Ruhland to appear that night, Thursday, for hearing before sub-committee. Mr. Blanton's lettre to Dr. Ruffin, it develops, was in reply to one asking for a conference and setting forth that the medical society is not critical or antagonistic.

Senator William H. King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, and several members of the House, heartily indorse the mass meeting and express sympathy for the Capital's health needs as described in the present series of articles. Blanton's sub-committee holds its night meeting with Representative J. William Ditter, of Pennsylvania, only Republican member absent. Dr. Ruhland appears for questioning, but his interrogation is postponed a day.

Friday, February 14—Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee, makes public letter from Director Elwood Street on working coditions of nurses at Gallinger Hospital.

Funds Lacking

fare and the administration of Gallinger Municipal Hospital are thoroughly in favor of instituting measures looking toward the possibility of granting a shorter work day to its graduate and student nurses.

"Toward this end, estimates in recent years have all carried requests for sufficient additional funds to permit the employment of the added nurses necessary to permit an 8-hour day, but unfortunately, these sums have not been appropriated.

"At the present time, it is impossible to grant an 8-hour day to the nurses, since the number available does not permit this schedule of working conditions. A rather large number of additional nurses would be required to put into effect three shifts and these could only be available by a considerable increase in the annual appropriations.

No Funds in Budget.

"Inasmuch as the budget now pending before Congress does not carry sufficient funds to permit the employment of enough nurses, to grant an 8-hour day, it is not believed that this plan could be instituted within the near future.

"The estimate that will be submitted during the next few months for the fiscal year 1938 might very well show sufficient extra employes to meet the suggestion for the shorter work day."

At the present time, student nurses at Gallinger are on 12-hour shifts. At night, the ratio is often as high as 1 nurse to 40 or more patients.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland, who appeared before the sub-committee at its first night meeting Thursday, only to have his hearing postponed, was heard yesterday forenoon. Superintendent of Gallinger and Tubeculosis Hospitals and the superintendent of the Children's Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Glenn Dale, Md., also were called before the sub-committee.

Their hearings were held in executive session, as were previous hearings on the 1937 supply bill.

Dr. J. H. Scarr, Noted Weather Expert, Is Dead

Senior U. S. Meteorologist Aided Lindbergh in First Ocean Flight.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 14.—Dr. James H. Scarr, who helped map Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's flight across the Atlantic in 1927 and predicted regular transatlantic air service, died today. He was 69.

His death at his home in Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., was announced by the Weather Bureau here.

As senior meteorologist, after a career which took him to weather stations all over the country, Dr. Scarr played an important part in the success of the Lindbergh flight. With his assistant, Dr. James J. Kimball, he prepared weather maps for the young flier.

Dr. Scarr assisted similarly in other transatlantic flights, notably in that of Clarence Chamberlin.

After Lindbergh's flight, Dr. Scarr predicted that within five years there would be some sort of regular transatlantic air service. He said, however, that the most difficult preliminary step—a Westward trip over the Atlantic—still was to be taken.

Born in Boston, Mich., January 10, 1867, Dr. Scarr spent most of his youth in Kansas, receiving his education in schools in Emporia and in Concordia.

He worked his way through normal and law schools by teaching and was admitted to the Kansas bar in 1892. At Mulhall, Okla., where he moved after marrying Laura E. Brown, of South Boston, Mich., he first taught school and then edited a paper.

He became a factor in Oklahoma politics, but discovered that a married lawyer with two sons, faced a severe economic handicap.

Then Dr. Scarr learned that weather could be a hobby to be ridden. He became one of the most proficient meteorologists of his day, passed examinations, and entered the Weather Bureau service at St. Louis in 1898.

Successively he served in stations in Cairo, Ill.; Helena, Mont.; Saramento and Tampa, coming to New York in 1908. He was designated chief of the bureau in 1926.

His first son, James B., was killed in the World War at Chateau Thierry. A second son, Francis J., served in the United States forces and now is a consulting engineer here.

His wife died last January 4. A brother, John W., living in Florida and a sister, May Frances, living in California, also survive.

Thunder On The Right.

The brutal attack by Parisian Royalists on Leon Blum, veteran leader of the French Socialist Party, is not to be dismissed as an episode of minor significance. Unpremeditated though it seems to have been, fortuitous it was not. Such manifestations of violence have, through French history, shown themselves capable of far-reaching disruptive effects.

The automobile carrying the elderly Socialist deputy awaited passage of the funeral of Jacques Bainville, the distinguished historian who was a founder of the Royalist league, Action Francaise. The marchers recognized Blum and attacked him—this was chance. But the Royalist press has for months been demanding his "execution"—and that was provocation.

Although Blum was seriously injured, no arrests of his assailants or their instigators have been made. Despite the Cabinet's order for dissolution of all militant Royalist organizations, these semi-Fascist organizations announce that they will continue their activities. Meanwhile, the Socialists declare that they will seek "satisfaction," and they are strong enough to overthrow the Sarraut government if they fail to secure it. Here are all the ingredients of serious internal disorders.

It is only a few weeks since the Chamber of Deputies enacted a law avowedly intended to end militancy in all the political leagues, of the right or left. The affaire Blum is evidence of the need to make this law efficacious. A general election, certain to arouse popular passions, is approaching in France, and may signalize serious disorders if the government fails in its duty to nip civil disturbances in the bud.

Parisian rioting of the sort now witnessed has been common enough during recent years. It has been so common and so consistently survived that an easy optimism is prompted to discount its significance. But increasing boldness in the activities of private armies, too easily tolerated by governments, has preceded the rise of every post-war dictatorship in Europe. Premier Sarraut will do well not to discount the implications of any mob action which threatens the stability of French democracy.

Tailspins Over The Airport.

When Congress presses its emergency keys down, the chatter goes round and round, and a jumble of confused proposals come out here. It took a week of going round and round before the House Military Affairs Committee settled down to a common-sense view of the airport tangle. Now the Senate Military Affairs Committee, the airport management and the War Department have taken over the round-and-round stunt with distressing consequences.

As a sample of ineptitude this procedure could scarcely be improved. But as a means of correcting a simple hazard at the Washington airport, and maintaining continuous service on the air transport lines serving this city, it is a complete flop. Congress has seldom more emphatically demonstrated its incapacity to dispose of an urgent minor issue with precision and dispatch.

A week of futile bickering on the House side was brought to a halt by Representative Nichols. As he pointed out, the final disposition of that section of Military road which bisects the airport cannot be intelligently made until the site for a permanent landing field has been chosen. If the proposal to give the right of way to the airport company had been accepted, one of two dilemmas would have returned to plague Congress. That body would have been forced to buy back property which it had given away, or to compensate the airport company for a forced outlay to finance a new road for only temporary use.

As soon as that classical bit of bungling had been safely cleared up, and the House had passed a sensible bill to permit control of traffic on the existing road, the Senate Military Affairs Committee involved the measure in a legal tangle and the throat of closing the airport again surges to the fore.

The airport management has reason to be disgusted with the delay and irresponsibility with which the matter has been handled. Yet it would be patently unwise to remove the present traffic control devices and close the airport when a solution seems to be so near at hand. Legal authority for the devices is undoubtedly lacking, but no official is going to clamp down upon the airport for illegally protecting its air passengers and crews during a few more days while enactment of the bill is being completed.

Company officials, as well as Congress, ought to realize that this is a time to stop going round and round and to start moving directly forward on less dramatic but more satisfactory lines.

A Reformed Housing Program.

Senator Wagner has for some time been working at a plan to facilitate slum clearance while simultaneously encouraging an expansion of private construction in the low-cost housing field. Under a tentative program which he has outlined as the basis for long-range legislation, the Federal Government would limit its slum-clearance activities to loans and grants to local governments. The latter, presumably, would confine their operations to projects that offered no competition to private building in the low-cost housing field.

This change would meet the well-deserved criticism that the Federal Government's housing agencies have heretofore failed to distinguish between projects requiring subsidization and projects in which subsidies merely serve to compete with, and retard recovery in, the building industry. Moreover, the new plan recognizes that Federal agencies are not the proper instrumentalities through which to carry out projects for eliminating the slum areas which disgrace so many American cities. This is a purely local responsibility which is pre-eminently the duty of local governments, with such Federal aid as careful survey shows to be essential.

While Federal construction to date has provided some relatively high-cost housing facilities for a few privileged groups, abandonment of that unnatural function of the central government would stimulate small-home construction by private builders. In addition to removing the threat of subsidized State competition, Senator Wagner's program holds promise of actively stimulating private building by giving the FHA a freer hand in insuring mortgage loans on small homes.

Insurance up to 90 per cent of the appraised value of mortgaged property seems excessive. The only argument for such a figure is that it would undoubtedly add greatly to the number of individuals in the low-income groups who could afford to make initial payments on new homes. Of course the risk of loss to the insuring agency would be minimized if building costs could previously be brought down and kept at reasonable levels.

Given an improved mechanism for financing private home building, together with adequate protection against excessive exactions for labor and materials, a revival of residential construction can be trusted to get under way without a governmental "aid" which has retarded instead of promoting private building. The development will be hastened by general improvement in business, as soon as the latter is reflected in an expansion of mass purchasing power. Indeed the tendency to recovery in residential building is already in evidence.

If the Administration will concentrate upon restricting subsidies to local bona fide slum clearance projects, the natural forces of recovery can be counted upon to do the rest. If not impeded by Federal action, these forces will provide the stimulus needed to remedy housing shortages due to destruction, to obsolescence, and to the growth of population which has accumulated during a prolonged depression.

Safety At Sea.

The row which led to the suspension of two officials in the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection is all the more regrettable because of the importance of the work in which these men have been engaged. There are indications that Frederick L. Adams, chief investigator, and Commander H. McCoy Jones, senior navigation officer of the bureau, have run into difficulties because they have been commendably energetic in pressing for legislation to enhance safety at sea. If that is a major part of the story they may feel assured of strong public support.

For years there has been discussion of legislation requiring greater protection for the lives of passengers and crews on ocean-going vessels. But the recent series of major tragedies on American ships has been insufficient to stimulate action. No doubt the drafting of the requisite legislation is a complicated matter, requiring consideration of many factors. Even so, it appears that more progress toward this urgent objective could have been made with zealous co-operation within the Department of Commerce.

Joseph B. Weaver, whose chief aids are now suspended, is known to be annoyed by this continued delay. Unless his associates in the Bureau of Navigation have been guilty of something more serious than any charge which has been made public, Mr. Weaver may be expected to make an issue out of the affair. Certainly the Department of Commerce seems extremely sensitive about publicity on the adequacy of existing safety legislation for American ships.

Wilbur LaRoe, counsel for the National Committee on Safety at Sea, considers the suspension of Messrs. Adams and Jones a "most flagrant instance of bureaucratic flouting of the public interest." His attitude and the circumstances surrounding these suspensions seem to throw upon the Department of Commerce the burden of proof that the safety-at-sea movement is being aggressively carried forward. If it is not, criticism will not be stopped by attempts to muzzle conscientious public servants.

The Meeting At Central.

For the first time in many years Washington as a community is coming to grips with its public health problem. Ever since the appointment of Dr. Ruhland as health officer the public has realized in a vague sort of way that the public health service is seriously inadequate. But details have been lacking. Now that the District Medical Society has undertaken an informative campaign, the truly shocking neglect of hygiene in Washington is being brought home to many citizens for the first time.

The process of slashing the Health Department's budget has gone on for many years. Heretofore this dangerous parsimony has brought forth only isolated and ineffective protests. This year a united community intends to make its influence felt. The mass meeting to be held at Central High School tomorrow at 3 p. m. will unfold the sad story of inadequate hospital facilities, uncontrolled disease and deteriorating preventive standards. And a subsequent campaign to restore the public health budget to the figure recommended by the District Commissioners is anticipated.

The importance of the problem this meeting will confront is indicated by the single problem of tuberculosis. The Federal Budget Bureau—which obviously has no direct information as to local health needs—slashed $113,000 from the allowance for institutions serving victims of this disease. If the decrease should be allowed to stand, the Tuberculosis Hospital at Upshur and Fourteenth streets would have to be closed.

Apparently the budget bureau acted on the theory that the sanitarium at Glenn Dale will take the place of the in-town hospital, an entirely false assumption. Only those patients having a good chance to recover can properly be sent to the sanitarium. The hospital serves advanced and surgical cases. Even if these patients could be properly accommodated at Glenn Dale, physicians say there is grave danger that many of them would die of hemorrhage while being transferred.

Still more important is the fact that the 700 beds to be provided by the sanitarium, plus 226 beds at the Upshur street hospital and 164 beds for tuberculosis patients at Gallinger Municipal Hospital, would still leave the District short of minimum requirements for effectively fighting this plague. Over 600 persons die of tuberculosis in Washington every year. That disgraceful record is exceeded on a per capita basis by only one other American city—San Antonio. When Detroit was faced by a similar condition a few years ago it promptly expanded its hospital facilities and cut the tuberculosis death rate 19 per cent in two years. Washington can probably duplicate this record if funds are forthcoming for a truly vigorous fight.

Yet the local prevalence of tuberculosis is only one phase of the larger public health problem. The District is actually undermining the health of its hospital nurses by requiring excessively long hours. The home nursing service is equally deficient in personnel. The Municipal Hospital at Gallinger is pitifully overcrowded, and a very serious and increasing menace of venereal disease is given totally inadequate attention.

Presentation of these facts by outstanding physicians should be sufficient to erase the cuts so carelessly made by the budget bureau. The great majority of Congressmen, as well as private citizens, appreciate the desirability of the Medical Society's efforts to draw attention to conditions which are a most fundamental concern to all who live in Washington. The results of tomorrow's community action, therefore, should soon be manifested in a lower death rate and elimination of conditions which are a disgrace as well as a danger to the National Capital.

"What has become of the merchant who used to give the customer a cigar when he paid his account in full?" asks a country editor. The question should be, what has become of the customer who used to pay his account in full?

On an ad valorem basis, probably the highest tax rate in this country is represented by the poll tax.

A Battleship Dispute.

From the Buffalo Evening News.

The dispute over the maximum size for battleships, one going back to the Geneva naval conference of 1927, has again broken out. This time it is not Great Britain and the United States that are involved, but the United States and France.

In 1927 Great Britain took the position that the maximum for battleships should be 20,000 tons; the United States held out for 35,000-ton ships. Great Britain, having naval bases all over the map, favored small and less expensive ships. But the United States, with few naval bases, felt the need of ships of greater size and cruising scope. The conference broke up with no agreement reached. At London, three years later, no action was taken on this matter other than to extend the Washington treaty clauses regarding battleships for four years.

It is now France that is the principal advocate of smaller ships, although, like Italy, it is engaged in building 35,000-ton fighting craft. However, the American viewpoint remains unchanged. From the strategic point of view the situation, so far as American naval needs are concerned, still calls for giant ships of great cruising range.

Overdue Reorganization.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: President Theodore Roosevelt, more than 30 years ago, pointed out to Congress that $1,000,000 a day could be saved by reorganizing the more than 250 departments, commissions, bureaus and other subdivisions of the Federal Government. Congress failed to accept the recommendation, but it is not recorded nor has it been shown that Teddy was not right.

Duplication and overlapping of duties by Government agencies are manifold. Each time a special agency is set up, though temporary in character, it invariably develops into a permanent organization. It may outgrow its usefulness, but those who head it, as well as those who are employed by it, have little difficulty in selling Congressmen the idea of perpetuation, since it increases opportunities for Congressmen to place their friends and constituents.

Since the day of Teddy Roosevelt five of his successors have made attempts at reorganization of our tangled and interwoven Government machinery. Jealousies, rivalry and politics have frustrated all efforts to create an orderly Government procedure. The mere mention of reorganization, let alone its presentation, always galvanizes opposition into action.

Two years ago the Congress, though reluctantly, vested in President Franklin D. Roosevelt the power to bring about a reorganization of the Federal Government. So far as the public knows no attempt has been made in this direction. If President Roosevelt undertakes such a reorganization, and is successful in the attempt, he will merit the praise of millions, though in doing so he will invoke the enmity of thousands of office holders and office seekers.

Louisiana's Spokeswoman.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since reading your editorial relative to the appointment of Mrs. Huey Long to the Senate, you have risen 100 per cent in my estimation. In fact, I have thought so well of the sentiment you expressed that I've cut out the article, passed it around to a few discriminating friends who may not have seen it in The Post, and now I shall stick it in my scrapbook along with a few other choice bits I have collected down through the years.

If the State of Louisiana had placed Mrs. Long in the Senate by popular vote then we might have felt that doubtless she was as capable as our other women in Congress—although I for one would have felt she had been too closely associated with Huey.

We need trained minds in Congress—men or women of dignity, brains and ability and not someone who has to be taught by bitter experience how to steer our ship of state through perilous times like these.

This has reminded me forcibly of the impeachment of Gov. Ferguson of Texas and of the election of "Ma" Ferguson to fill his place. I never had a high regard for Texas after that and I was justified in thinking Ma Ferguson was ill chosen.

Nevertheless, I have Mrs. Long's recipe for the cake with which she won her husband and I shall follow her career in Congress and it may be that she has a recipe for dealing with the affairs of the Nation that will be as successful as her method of winning a husband.

At any rate, while you have lost favor somewhat with Mrs. Charlotte Delano as per her recent criticism of your editorial, you certainly go to the head of the class with me.

New Deal Vs. Socialism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the three weeks which has elapsed since former Gov. Smith's speech at the Liberty League dinner, no comparison has been made in the press between the Democratic platform of 1932 and the Socialist platform of that same year. I believe it would be of great public interest if people would, as Smith says, "lay them on the dining room table" and draw their own conclusions as to which direction the New Deal is taking them.

Secretary Ickes' Speech.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in this morning's Post indicates that Secretary Ickes' barbs have gotten under your skin. It proves nothing to use such adjectives in connection with Mr. Ickes' oratory as "flamboyant," and the deficiency in his logic that you refer to is due to a sloppy reading of the Ickes effort rather than to any inherent weaknesses in the speech itself. Mr. Ickes did not attempt to prove that Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Roosevelt are alike because both were attacked and abused. What he did attempt to prove, and successfully, was that the attackers of both men were of the same pin stripe because they abused in the same words and attacked the same humanitarian motives.

Perhaps, as Mr. Hoover said yesterday, this Administration has not solved a single national problem. In the administration of Mr. Hoover not only was the same thing true, but the additional fact that he did not even try to solve a single problem. He merely sat down behind his high collar and waited for something to turn up. Fortunately for the country something did turn up—Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. Ickes' speech rings true to millions of us in whose behalf it was made, whereas Hoover is the same old Hoover, the disgruntled failure who still cannot face the fact that when the American people said "Get out" they also meant "and stay out."

New England Speaks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Denned in by the blizzard, our misery was relieved by two articles in The Post this morning, "Athens in Ruins" and a letter from Miss Woodbury on the New England conscience. As a Curtis followed Woodbury on the Supreme Court, this letter may be printed as a footnote to the Woodbury opinion.

The New England conscience is not as a drop of sluggish mercury set in an upright tube to measure the weight of east or west winds. It is the conscience of thinkers, not talkers. When an unmannerly member of the President's Cabinet, a short time ago, denounced our people as "whiners" the insult went almost unnoticed. When the same man described a decision of the Supreme Court as a "legalized steal" a New England Congressman urged that the hog-raiser be impeached. We ignored the personal affront, but when he reviled our most sacred institution he was properly denounced.

Your editorial pictures Jim Curley, temporary Governor, as the Kingfish of Jamaica Pond. The humor appears when it is known that the only fish in that sluggish pond is the sculpin.

LUCINDEA CURTIS.

Washington, Feb. 7.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While your lurid picture of "Athens in Ruins" may be somewhat accurate in its political outlines, Boston is culturally perhaps as good as ever it was. Out of the list of one news writer's acquaintances I have compiled a quite stupendous list of Boston people, mostly young, whose names are non-British and non-Irish, and who are doing things in literature, painting, sculpture and music.

The list could be still further expanded if one included science, particularly medical science, and the law. Where we New England Yankees are gradually dropping out of the cultural pursuits, young Jews, Portuguese, Canadian French, Scandinavians, Finns, Germans, Italians and even the Japanese are working overtime to sustain the standing of this old center of the arts of civilization.

Boston wasn't dying culturally when "Henry Adams set out to gain its education." It was providing an education for Bernhard Berensen.

A Guard To Impatience.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have watched the Congress in operation for more than 40 years. In that time I cannot recall an instance where the Supreme Court attempted to "browbeat" either the Congress or the President. But both the other branches have had a disposition at times to "browbeat" each other, and, on occasion, to take a healthy slap at the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court and the President are so hedged about with obstacles (written and unwritten) that neither could easily dominate the Congress without a change in the Constitution, or through revolution. But the Congress has always had it within its power to obstruct or delay the actions of either the Supreme Court or the President, or both very materially.

Congress can, by mere legislative act, increase or decrease the number composing the Supreme Court; practically abolish it for the time being by refusing to appropriate money for its operation, and by other acts, none the less effective but less drastic, effect so great a change in its customary duties as almost to change the form of our National Government. Against the President, it could enact laws taking away many powers of the President by indirection. It could abolish his Cabinet; it could make the whole Cabinet solely responsible to it; it could abolish any commission in the Administration or create new ones solely responsible to Congress—in fact, it has a thousand and one legislative devices usable under the present Constitution whereby it could strip the President of power to the point where he would be little more than a figurehead.

Therefore should an amendment to the Constitution be enacted limiting the Supreme Court power to pass on the constitutionality of acts of the Congress, the Congress, if not almost immediately, would in the not far future virtually become the dictator in this country. Majorities in legislative bodies, particularly so when elected during a crisis of any nature, are prone to be impatient of restraints; hence usually seek to make itself dominant and organized to effect immediate and drastic action to any end it might at the moment aspire to achieve. This was true in our Congress during the reconstruction period following the Civil War. It was true after the great Republican landslide following the World War. It was, strange to say, equally but negatively true following the great New Deal landslide in 1932.

Presidential Primaries?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In these days when almost everything is said and done for political effect there is much contradiction and confusion. The great thrifty middle class who have worked to pay for their modest homes seem to be in the "forgotten man" class. They are the ones who will pay the ten billion national debt increase piled up to delay recovery.

I don't believe democracy is a failure, when it is tried. It is the lack of it that has failed. Give the people a chance to nominate their candidates for President with a Presidential primary in each State. Compel each party to enter their candidates in the primary. Let the independent voters have a ballot containing the names of the candidates of all the parties and the independent candidates. When the votes are counted the delegates would know who and what the people wanted when they go to the nominating conventions. The politicians don't want to know, and they urge that uninstructed delegates be sent so they can be free to put it over on the people. With such a primary for all Federal officers like Norris and Borah, who use the party organization to ride into office upon, could enter as independents, where they belong.

The Post Impressionist

Art Versus Artifice

Post Office, Saturday.

THE other evening we took a 15-year-old boy to see George M. Cohan in his latest show. At the end of the first of its two acts, we inquired of our guest how he liked the leading player's performance.

That guest, who had never seen Cohan before, replied:

"I think he's kind of different from most actors. He behaves just as if he wasn't on the stage."

* * * *

After the last curtain, we accompanied our young man "back"—took him into the star's dressing-room.

Cohan was extended on one of those chairs like a barber's—or a dentist's—which adorn so many stellar dressing-rooms. Two or three suits of clothes hung on pegs along the wall behind him. Bending over him, a deft Filipino was engaged in removing the few traces of make-up from the player's face.

There followed a bit of politeness, a bit of pleasantry and a bit of more serious talk. Then this columnist and his charge plunged again in wintry E street.

"What," we now inquired, "do you think of Mr. Cohan off the stage?"

"Why, father," replied the boy, "I think, when he's off the stage, he's just the way you'd expect him to be off the stage when you see him on it."

When the maturer mind adds them up, those unconsidered impressions become a pretty profound criticism of the histrionic art.

The days of stage-ranting died, happily, long ago. Our own belief is that they were not so aged as most moderns, proud of their modernity, pretend to believe—nor yet so appealing to the best taste of their times.

Did Burbage, plump first performer of "Hamlet," pound his protuberant doublet when wishing that his too, too solid flesh would melt? We've read no record of Anne Bracegirdle shrieking "Almora's" great speech—even if she were secretly married to the author of "The Mourning Bride." And had Sarah Siddons bellowed her "Lady Macbeth," she, most probably, would never have been said to surpass Rachel in dignity—conservative Dr. Johnson would certainly never have written his autograph on the hem of her gown in Reynold's portrait of her as the Tragic Muse.

In our youth, we talked with several greybeards who had seen Forrest tear the scenery, heard McCullough rave. They agreed that, when it came to McCullough and Forrest, they had ever preferred Joseph Jefferson.

* * * *

Exceptions there were—have probably always been:

There are some on the German stage, some—outside the frankly artificial classic French drama—on the stage of France. Italy had Duse—still has, more or less, Grammatica. In London, John Hare would play "Benjamin Goldfinch" in the afternoon exactly as if he were your uncle, "Lord Quex" in the evening precisely as if he were your brother-in-law—people as different as beef from grouse, yet people whom you knew.

And here at home there were, anyhow, Henry E. Dixey and Nat Goodwin. There are more today.

But there are still almost as few as those who held the bridge with Horatius. There is nothing more unnatural than the "Natural School" of acting.

The majority of its followers do try to act as they think the characters they are enacting would seem, to the average man, to behave in actual life. The trouble is that the majority of this majority—shutting themselves in hothouses and observing the outside world through misty glass—don't know the characters, don't know the average man and, above all, don't know actual life.

* * * *

Well, George Cohan's pre-eminence lies in his possession of that triple knowledge and in his ability to make it a living thing.

* * * *

Do you remember those creepy lines that Robert W. Chambers invented for a "quotation" to lead some early story of his? To a stranger at a costume ball, a dancer says: "Now, sir, remove your mask." And the stranger answers: "Mask? I wear no mask."

For the conclusion of this present column, we wanted to concoct some such "snapper"—with, however, an entirely wholesome note to it, since wholesomeness is one of Cohan's dominant characteristics. We wanted to say that—though, the other evening, we saw Cohan's make-up come off—essentially, he wears no make-up.

Yet the implication wouldn't have been true. He wears, in effect, a double make-up. He is so "natural" because he is so much an artist. He is a master of what Cicero considered the greatest of the arts: the art that conceals art.

THE WHIPPING-POST.

Fair Enough

Entering Germany.

Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Feb. 14.

TO go back a couple of days, the route from London to Garmisch followed a line parallel to the old Western Front, through towns which took a terrible hammering from German guns, and along toward 10 o'clock the blasted train pulled up for half an hour at Chalon-sur-Marne. There the presence on the railroad platform of a detachment of French troops and some rather obvious detectives peering under the cars and squinting at the passengers who got off drew attention to a private car which lay on a siding, apparently the object of considerable anxiety on the part of the French government.

The baggage porter said that it was the private car of King Carol of Rumania, who had been in Paris, plotting political devilment on the way home from the funeral of King George of England, who detested him with hearty joy and used to call him foul names with all the vigor of a man who had wished to follow the sea and learned to curse in the nautical school.

Queen Marie had merely put herself in wrong with the King who was the acknowledged head of the surviving European royalty, when she sold a testimonial for advertising puposes, but hee the King used curious reasoning, for he himself had done the same thing on an amateur basis a thousand times in awading royal appointments to purveyors of whisky, chutney, cough sirup and practically every other article of personal and household use which is manufactured in the British Empire.

IT may seem incredible that the relations of nations and eventually the state of millions of people may be influenced by such petty personal considerations—but there you are. In a railroad station at Chalon-sur-Marne lay this private car with pretty lamp shades on the tables and a couple of flunkeys visible through the curtains, although the passengers themselves were not to be seen and may have turned in for the night.

After some switching and jolting the royal car was hitched on to the train, and I was just gathering myself for a mighty crash against Carol's royal privacy when the conductor came through and said it wasn't Carol at all but Prince Paul, regent of Yugoslavia, who had been up to some mysterious business in Paris after the big funeral.

I might have scored on Carol, for he is a man of the world somewhat on the style of the new King of England, but Prince Paul belongs to a different breed, and, anyway, the French weren't taking any chances with him, remembering the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia at Marseille.

I didn't observe whether the Germans gave him any special protection, for we arrived at Munich at 9 in the morning and the train shoved off toward the Balkans, while I, somewhat apprehensively, felt for the first time the atmosphere of the Nazi state which has been so often described in papers and books for three years.

The station was full of the blond type of men and women, mostly in their twenties and most of them tramping along in ski boots, tearing for jerkwater trains for the mountains, and steel cleats screeched on concrete platforms. They were ostentatiously healthy and rugged, and the long-legged girls in ski pants carried their own rug sacks and skis, asking no favors from the men.

• • • •

I WAS without a cent of German money, but had traveler's checks for one thousand marks, which cost a quarter outside of the country but forty cents within Germany, and it took almost an hour to cash a sheet of script to obtain the day's allowance of a hundred marks and tip the baggage porter.

Nowhere in sight were there any references to Jews, and up until now, my third day in the country, I've seen none of the placards which I had read about, although it is explained that these were completely effaced by official orders. Until recently the legend "Jews Not Wanted Here" was everywhere but with the beginning of the games the whole region and the highways leading to Garmisch were "purged," to use a familiar word.

The foreign press at Garmisch files thousands of words of impressions to all participant countries, and any honest reporters in this land will have to admit that nothing meets the eye or ear which concerns the cry of persecution.

However, I'm assured that this is a false picture and that the rest of the country is placarded as before, and that when the games are over the anti-Semitic program will be resumed hereabouts, all of which sounds credible and consistent.

Last night a lot of tourists, journalists and athletes gathered in the Hofbrau Stube to eat susage and kraut and drink Munich beer and listened to the offensive Alpine yodeling, concerning which Mussolini performed a service to humanity when he ordered the suppression of the native army of the Tyrol.

Anglo-U. S. Agreement In Orient Predicted

London, Feb. 14 (AP).—Vicente Villamin, Philippine lawyer and economist, today said he was convinced there will be an Anglo-American understanding in the Orient, which will change the United States policy of complete withdrawal from alliance the Philippines. He predicted the Anglo-American agreement will take the place of any discussed Anglo-Japanese alliance.

Villamin emphasized that his opinion was reached after he had talked with prominent Americans and Englishmen at London. He left for Paris today.

Labor Controversy

Dominance Of Mass Production Industry By A Few Corporation Leaders Forces Conflict Between Crafts, Industrial Unions.

By V. J. Wyckoff.

Special Correspondent of The Post.

IMPORTANT issues are involved in the present controversy between the leaders of the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization over the merits of industrial and craft unions.

It is partly a contest between men—William Green as president of the Federation, and John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers. It is also partly a clash between large groups of unions. But most of all this struggle gives evidence that the labor movement in the United States is entering a new phase of development in which industrial unionism may possibly become established as a powerful economic and political force.

Just a word about the two forms of labor organization under discussion. A craft or trade union seeks to bring together those laborers doing the same kind of work, using the same kind of tool or tools. For instance, separate trade unions have been formed by carpenters, bricklayers, railroad engineers, iron molders. An industrial union is organized around a group of employes engaged in the same industry irrespective of their individual trades. The United Mine Workers illustrate the principle of the industrial or vertical union. Sweepers, stationary engineers, electricians, coal miners—in an organized mine all these workmen are members of the local of the U. M. W. Of course, the electricians may hold cards in their trade union, but their allegiance while at the mine is to the local industrial union.

• • • •

THE proper form of organization for mass production industries is the immediate, objective issue involved in the current disagreement between the A. F. of L. and the committee for industrial organization, which represents eight national unions. Certain fields have been specifically mentioned for attention. They are steel, automobile, radio and aluminum. Both sides admit the necessity for unionization. They differ on structure. The A. F. of L., still largely composed of craft unions, insists that craft lines be followed. Just the opposite form is urged by the committee, which is dominated by the miners and several clothing unions of the industrial type.

Yet the results of the present collision might easily exert only slight influence in deciding the ultimate path for organized labor. The issue has arisen from, and will possibly be settled by, three forces so powerful that particular labor group policies seem almost irrelevant. The nature of these three forces may be briefly suggested.

• • • •

THE first is the trend toward the concentration of American industry into larger physical units and the resulting pyramiding of human control. For example, no effective refutation has been given to the conclusions by Berle and Means, drawn from their study of the 200 largest non-banking corporations in the United States. These 200 corporations have about one-half of al lthe non-banking corporate wealth in this country. And actual control over policies and administration is exercised by those with a decidedly minority ownership interest excepr in 22 out of the 200 enterprises. Strengthening this legal unification of industrial management are the various associations among business leaders.

If labor is to hold its own in the industrial struggle, it seems necessary that it parallel the above structural concentration of employers' power. Such is an obviously necessary tactical move, especially because an increasing proportion of potential labor union members are hired by these large corporations.

But in what form should labor organize to make its power effective? Up to the last several decades many manufacturing processes centered around one operation performed by a skilled group of artisans. Machinists, glass blowers, typesetters, cigar makers, wood workers, stone cutters. One tightly organized key craft could tie up an obstinate employer or even a sectional industry. Then entered the industrial engineer, breaking major operations into simple units, each requiring less personal skill or fewer skilled workers. And with the engineer moved the inventor, creating machines that further erased craft lines. This undermining of craft skill by industrial progress is the second fundamental influence behind the present controversy in the ranks of organized labor.

THE third specific force is less easy to establish, yet it is increasingly apparent. With the tendency toward merging skilled and unskilled labor into a common classification of mass-production workers there is developing a mutuality of interests among the employed. The A. F. of L. in former years lent no encouragement to the creation of a working-class mind. Under Gompers it was developed into an aristocracy of skilled artisans, ignoring the industrial masses. At no time did it contain more than about 10 per cent of the eligible employed. But now this common denominator of "machine worker" is slowly creating a class consciousness.

Furthermore, for 50 years organized labor for the most part has had no definite ties with political parties or candidates. Thus it is quite significant that just recently the officers of the United Mine Workers have been authorized by the membership to give financial aid to President Roosevelt in a re-election campaign The Guffey Coal, Wagner Labor Board and Social Security measures are considered evidences of Roosevelt's friendliness to labor and his opposition to "predatory interests." If employers form political liberty leagues, labor must also look after its liberties.

• • • •

JUST why should this question of craft versus industrial unionism come to the fore at this time? There are several justifiable surmises. The 7a clause in the NRA codes raised hopes of real union progress; those hopes have not passed with the death of the blue eagle. Also the Wagner bill, by discouraging company unions, bestowed Federal blessings, at least by implication, on independent labor organizations. The workers in many vital industries, heretofore impregnable, seem ripe for unionization, so ripe that even the most indolent, conservative labor leaders can hardly avoid a gesture toward picking the fruit.

Then again, there are some indications that personal prestige is involved. Certainly now that defiant platform attitudes have been struck one may feel sure that neither Green, of the A. F. of L., nor Lewis, of the U. M. W., is going to give up his commanding position without full use of the resources at command.

Consider Lewis: For many years he has had to face deep factional fights within his own organization. Bitter charges were made that he was going conservative, was getting soft, was sacrificing the interests of the miners to the policies of the federation of which he was also vice president. Thus it is possible that this disagreement with Green and the A. F. of L. has provided a welcomed issue on which regulars and rebels in the local mine unions can be reunited against a common foe. Certainly the recent vote of the miners' contion to boost Lewis' salary from $12,000 to $25,000 a year—and his diplomatic refusal—seems to indicate that the boys at the convention were right behind him.

For slow moving, genial William Green the labor music is certainly going 'round and 'round. And he does not know where it will come out. This threatened secession of the miners, the largest unit in the A. F. of L., is almost cataclysmic and Green warns them of the power of the federation and speaks movingly of its aid in times past. Green must consider Lewis little short of a traitor, unless the two men have formed a profound piece of strategy and are putting on a show. It would, therefore, seem that Green is being forced into a defense of craft unionism upon which the federation was founded 50 years ago. If he does not make concessions it is possible that either he or the A. F. of L. will be done in.

IN summary, then, the present labor situation seems to result from, and depend upon, the following: Economic forces in the United States are concentrating the control of many industries in the hands of relatively few men. Labor must parallel this administrative structure and at the same time organize the mass production industries, or go the way of all flesh.

The basis for such independent labor unionization (in contrast with company unions) is either along craft or industrial lines, and for success there must be unity of action by the existing unions. Yet it is on this very point of "form" that the most powerful groups of organized labor in this country are now in bitter disagreement. The spectacle must delight the employers in the to-be-unionized industries.

On this question of craft versus industrial unions organized labor could easily exhaust itself in civil warfare. But there is also the possibility that from the conflict will emerge a united militant unionism, probably of the industrial type.

Don't Mention It.

Bloom's Idea

By Karl Schriftgiesser

Sesqui-Centennial

IT was not so many years ago that Sol Bloom assumed singlehanded the magnitudinous task of rescuing George Washington from obscurity. That he succeeded in this patriotic endeavor is attested by the fact that even now there is a gentleman going about the country in colonial clothes and posing before high school audiences as the Father of His Country. This gentleman was Mr. Bloom's greatest discovery, and undoubtedly will be called back from the provinces in 1937, when Mr. Bloom's second great patriotic endeavor bears fruit.

At the present moment Mr. Bloom is all a-dither and working very hard, which, of course, will not be considered news by those who know him well. His latest venture in patriotism comes under the heading of Director General of the United States Constitutional Esquicentennial Commission; which has already issued a "Tentative Report on the Sesquicentennial Observance of the Formation of the United States Constitution." This, I suspect, is from the pen of Mr. Bloom, and is filled with many a cute idea of what Mr. Bloom thinks would be fitting for the country to do, on, and before, and after, September 17, 1937.

Unfortunately, Mr. Bloom was not in his office yesterday when your correspondent called, disguised as a resident of Central Park, a territory that Mr. Bloom sedulously guards in Congress. But this did not prevent us from seeing the Bloom masterpiece. In fact, nothing could have prevented it. It fills the whole space, and perhaps the reason why Mr. Bloom was not available was because he was hidden behind it. The silence in the office, however, makes that seem doubtful.

• • • •

HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY, who has immortalized in oils such distinguished gentlemen as George Harvey, Will Hays and Benito Mussolini, is the artist who has placed upon canvas the result of Mr. Bloom's considerable research. Mr. Bloom, I am told, says that from his brush has come the only authentic illustration extant of just what took place in Philadelphia September 17, 1787.

In this gay scene, every one of the signers of the Constitution is placed just exactly as he was that day. George Washington is standing up and Mr. Hamilton is sitting down, which exactly reverses all previous conceptions. Mr. Bloom's spokesman was not sure just what period of the signing this picture represents. He admits that perhaps at a later moment Mr. Hamilton got up and gave Mr. Washington his seat. At any rate, Mr. Washington is all dressed in black, with white fluffy cuffs, and is showing his profile. Mr. Bloom has always said that Washington should never be shown full face, and Mr. Bloom ought to know.

As I gather it, this scene was drawn and painted from blueprints prepared by Mr. Bloom, after enough months of research and study of this phase of constitutional history to make him eligible for a post on the Supreme Court bench, or at least with the American Liberty League. Mr. Bloom hopes that this painting will become the official poster of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission. Mr. Christy has left space for some words at the top, over which flits an angel, or lady, who looks like that once-familiar Spirit of the Red Cross, which he contributed to the War to End War.

IN case any frugal soul feels that this Constitution Celebration is going to cost a lot of money Mr. Bloom has devised a means of getting Mr. Farley to foot the bills. (Mr. Bloom is a Democrat, so that idea is not too strange.) He wants Mr. Farley to print him a series of stamps, which he modestly says in his tentative report "are destined to become of great historic value." He is sure "philatelists, historical associations, museums and libraries" will pay big money for these stamps. He even has suggested some designs, beginning with the ½-cent variety and ranging to the 12-cent denomination.

For the half-cent size he thinks a pretty picture of the new Supreme Court would do very well. He rates Washington at 2 cents, Madison at 3 cents, and Hamilton at 4 cents. For a nickel he would give you a swell picture, perhaps the one inadequately described above. Independence Hall is rated at 7 cents, but he thinks it would be nice to put this scene on all stamped envelopes from one-half cent to the 5-cent variety. His most expensive stamp would be the Statue of Liberty. Just how he arrived at the varied valuations I will try and find out, and report at a later date.

The United States Sesquicentennial Commission, Sol Bloom, director general, was created by act of Congress, and President Roosevelt is the honorary chairman. Gen. Bloom, however, alone may be safely depended upon to make September 17, 1937, a great day in history. Not having found Mr. Bloom in his office, I cannot say if the great Christy masterpiece is available for public appreciation. Perhaps Mr. Bloom is saving it for that date, for an unveiling with appropriate ceremonies, with the auctioning off of stamps ("Who offers one-half cent for the Supreme Court?" etc.) to lend the occasion proper gusto.

Liberty League Defies Senate's Right to Query

Black Intimates du Ponts Hold Check Rein on Contributions.

By the Associated Press.

The American Liberty League asserted in a statement last night that the Senate lobby investigating committee had no authority to compel individuals to answer a questionnaire on contributions.

Promptly, Chairman Black (Democrat), Alabama, of the committee, replied that it was "a little difficult to believe that the league would attempt to intimidate or coerce its own members to keep their mouths shut until the du Ponts say they can talk."

Black's committee has sent out several thousand questionnaires to individuals and organizations in an effort to get a complete picture of lobbying for and against legislation. Among other things, they were asked if they had contributed to such organizations as the American Liberty League.

Senate "Without Authority."

"The league is advised by counsel," the league statement said, "that the Senate committee has no authority to compel answers to the questionnaire.

"The effort of the Senate committee is an obvious attempt to intimidate citizens in the exercise of their constitutional rights of freedom of speech and of petitioning the Government.

"These rights may be employed through group action, as well as by individuals acting alone. The Constitution expressly prohibits the Congress from enacting any law impairing or abridging such rights.

"The American Liberty League was created for the purpose of disseminating information on Constitutional issues. It is so engaged. It is not, as are certain organizations conspicuously omitted from the Senate Committee questionnaire, concerned with any activities which could even remotely be characterized as 'lobbying'."

The statement said that if the committee's action was intended in good faith it would not have been limited to the league and a few other unspecified organizations.

Black's reply:

"I have seen what purported to be a Liberty League statement. It's a little difficult to comment because I don't know what lawyer wrote it and what his fee was. I presume he was very highly paid.

Difficult to Comment.

"I don't know where the meeting was or how many du Ponts were there. I don't know what office in the Empire State Building it was held in. So it's a little difficult for me to comment as to why these anonymous gentlemen have such fear and apprehension and are so solicitous lest somebody answer questions.

"Frankly, I thought the Liberty League was devoted to freedom. It's a little difficult to believe that the league would attempt to intimidate or coerce its own members to keep their mouths shut until the du Ponts say they can talk.

"It's a little difficult to understand why the Liberty League, which has given a sworn statement of its contributors, is objecting to anyone's answering questions about the contributions which he probably made very proudly."

Thomas Excoriates League.

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—Senator Elbert D. Thomas (Democrat), Utah, tonight denounced the American Liberty League as a "corporation of junked political 'jallopies'" at a meeting sponsored by Phi Delta Kappa, national honorary educational fraternity, at Columbia University.

He defined "jallopy" as a trade term for an automobile that is useless for anything but plain junk or a museum exhibit.

The Utah Senator also criticized the system under which "those elements in our Nation which have sufficient means to hire expensive lawyers" are capable of "tying up both the State and the Nation" by litigation.

"Whenever I hear the title, 'American Liberty League,'" said Thomas, "I am reminded of a famous sentence by an equally famous author, Viscount Bryce, who wrote a book on the Holy Roman Empire wherein he states that the Holy Roman Empire was not holy, was not Roman and was not an empire.

"The American Liberty League is only American in the same sense that a Chinese laundry or a Greek restaurant may be called an American laundry or an American restaurant. It knows nothing of liberty and it is a league only in that narrow sense that might dignify a clique of high-binders as a league of liberty-loving gentlemen of the road."

Fido, what a break for you
Under the Red, White and Blue!
No more days of care and strife—
Yours the more abundant life!

See the dog pound so conceived
It can hardly be believed:
Private rooms for one or two
With a lovely garden view!

Double rooms or singles where
Any dog can comforts share;
De luxe baths where any pup
Can drop in and get washed up.

Showers for a canine that
Is a loyal Democrat;
Turkish towels, too, I hope,
Salt baths and a cake of soap.

Tinted walls and hardwood floors,
Windows big and paneled doors:
Wag your tail and show us, poodle,
Gratitude to Yankee Doodle!

Draperies and color schemes
Far beyond a puppy's dreams;
Give a canine cheer! Hooray
For the WPA!

Radios and light and heat,
Bones de luxe with ample meat;
Clean, fresh bedding every night—
Pillows (if you've voted right)!

If there's anything you lack
Press a buzzer! Get it! Smack!
Uncle Sam is out to see
Poodles roll in luxury.

No more scratching, Fido, please
Washington controls your fleas!
If an itch should bother you
Write Jim Farley, P. D. Q.!

No more chasing of your tail—
Exercise of no avail;
Let such foolish pursuits bore you—
Uncle Sam will do 'em for you!

Fido, you should grateful be
To the new Democracy;
What a home for you to win! . . .
Hey! One side! I'm moving in!

Townsend Plan Funds Inquiry Asked in House

Rep. Bell Estimates Annual Donations to Promoters Up to $1,200,000.

By the Associated Press.

Estimating that annual contributions of the Townsend plan organization ran as high as $1,200,000, Representative Bell (Democrat), Missouri, yesterday asked the House Rules Committee to report favorably a resolution to investigate promoters of the plan.

Bell told the committee that he wanted to know "not only the effect of the Townsend organization but the kind of people who are behind it." The parent organization, he charged, is a "closed corporation" of three directors—Dr. F. E. Townsend, president; R. E. Clements, secretary-treasurer and a brother of Dr. Townsend.

Late in the day, Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the Rules Committee, told the House that if the Bell resolution is reported he plans to call it up for action next Wednesday before the House starts consideration of the new farm bill.

Bell's original resolution called for a seven-man investigating committee. He revised it today to provide for an eight-man committee, of four Democrates and four Republicans to make it bipartisan.

Members of the rules committee said privately they thought the resolution would be adopted.

Bell was joined by Representative Ferguson (Democrat), Oklahoma, in appearing before the committee to urge the investigation. Representative Smith (Democrat), Washington, advised Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), New York, he wanted to appear in opposition.

Smith requested permission to ask either Bell or Ferguson a question. O'Connor denied the request, but added the committee would hear Smith when hearings are resumed Monday.

"I only wanted to ask the gentlemen whether there has been any demand from any paid-up members of Townsend clubs for this investigation," said Smith.

While Bell directed his testimony principally to the Townsend plan he told the committee his resolution covers "all so-called pension rackets and any pension organization which is preying on the people of the United States."

McMullen Trial By Army Court Will Be Public

Secretary Dern, Woodring May Be Called to Testify Monday.

By the Associated Press.

A public court martial for Col. Joseph I. McMullen was planned yesterday by the fellow Army officers who will bring him to trial Monday on a charge of misconduct in connection with War Department contracts.

Meanwhile, word spread that officers high in the Army's top command, possibly including Secretary Dern and Assistant Secretary Woodring, may be summoned to testify.

Col. McMullen, who is attached to the judge advocate general's department, was arraigned secretly on January 9, under an article of war relating to "offenses to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

The court martial then was suspended until February 17 to permit time for legal preparation. A tentative decision to conduct the trial in public was reached by members of the court martial during the intervening period.

McMullen is charged specifically with accepting two round trip railroad tickets from Washington to San Francisco as a "reward" for legal advice and assistance to Joseph Silverman, jr., a dealer in surplus Army goods, while the latter was seking certain contractual concessions from the War Department.

McMullen's official duties included those of legal counsel to the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of War in connection with Army contracts. The maximum penalty for conviction under the article is dismissal from the Army.

Col. McMullen, whose home is at Palo Alto, Calif., has employed a battery of San Francisco attorneys to defend him in addition to the two Army officers assigned to his defense by the court martial.

He also is under indictment in a District of Columbia court for allegedly accepting fees from a firm lobbying against a tax bill.

About the same time, Col. Alexander E. Williams, former assistant Quartermaster General, was dismissed from the service for accepting a loan from a tire tube salesman seeking to interest the Army in purchasing his product.

D. C. Airport Stays Open

was raised by Senator Sheppard, of Texas, chairman of the committee, and other members with judicial background.

As a consequence the committee decided to call upon the Justice Department for advice in the matter to be delivered at a special subcommittee meeting at 10 o'clock Monday morning.

As the Justice Department has already taken a firm stand against the prescriptive claims of Virginia in the District-Virginia boundary dispute, it is not likely that it will hold the State has any legal claim on Military road.

When the House passed the resolution, Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, asked McSwain whether the War Department was likely to exercise the authority to close the highway entirely. McSwain replied in the negative and further agreed to consider sympathetically an amendment which Smith said would be offered in the Senate to eliminate the closing provision and thus leave the War Department only authority to erect barriers or safeguards.

Although the resolution further authorizes the Secretary of War to bar the airport from using the road in case it does not pay the expenses of maintaining the guards, Solomon said that the original deed under which the tract was transferred to the Federal Government gives the owners of adjacent property permanent rights to use the road.

The upshot of all the legislative maneuvers on Capitol Hill has been to put the War Department in a tough spot. While Secretary Dern has assured McSwain that the department will not press its contention that the airport has no legal rights to patrol or even erect stop lights on Military road for the time, War Department officials admittedly have no desire to take over the job of patrolling the highway or of supervising traffic control.

Secretary Dern would be held personally responsible for damages, it is said, if a serious accident should occur on the road through collision of an airplane and a motor vehicle.

A near-accident on Military road Thursday added to the apprehension of War Department officials. A fully-loaded Eastern Airlines transport plane, unable to get off the ground before reaching Military road, tore down a boundary light and crashed through the fence between the highway and the Arlington experimental farm. No one was injured and no motor vehicle was in the path of the plane, but the flight was canceled.

sive knowledge of the postal service."

The outgoing postmaster, Mooney, was chief clerk of the Postoffice Department when he was appointed postmaster here April 10, 1923, by President Harding. His last four-year term expired February 5. That he, a Republican, served so long in a Democratic administration was due to a policy enunciated at the outset by Postmaster General Farley, that all postmasters would be allowed to serve out their terms.

Mooney's retention as assistant postmaster met with wide approval. As postmaster he received $9,000 a year. As an assistant he will get $4,700.

Burke, the postmaster-elect, will receive $10,000 a year, beginning July 1. The raise will be due to an increase in business handled in the local postoffice. Only one postmaster in the country is paid more—the postmaster of New York City, who receives $12,000 a year.

Burke is married and has three children—Mary Virginia, William and Vincent, jr. The family lives in Cathedral Mansions.

Mooney's retention as assistant postmaster will not affect the status of W. H. Haycock, present assistant postmaster, who will continue to serve in that capacity. Under the law the department is authorized to retain two assistant postmasters at postoffices the size of that here.

Securities Law Liberalization Asked in Senate

By the Associated Press.

A bill permitting stock exchanges to continue trading in unlisted securities under scrutiny of the Securities Exchange Commission was introduced yesterday by Chairman Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, of the Senate Banking Committee.

Drafted by Chairman James M. Landis of the SEC, the measure would empower the commission to terminate such practices partially or wholly if, at any time, it feels such action to be in the public interest or necessary for protection of investors.

The measure was an amendment to the securities exchange act, which prescribed that all such trading cease July 1. Dealings of the nature involved constitute some 80 per cent of the business of the New York Curb Exchange.

When an exchange permits the listing of a security it makes requirements as to regular business reports and charges certain fees. In addition listed securities must be registered with the commission. These obligations have been eased in some cases by exchange officials, permitting trading without listing.

Fletcher predicted passage of the bill.

"We've got to look out for this trading so as to see that the investor is properly considered and the public interest protected," he said, adding:

"And, of secondary consideration, we have to look out for the exchanges as reasonably as possible. This measure would give the securities and exchange commission that power. A soon as I get some response, we will have public hearings, probably in a couple of weeks."

The bill would provide that the continuance may apply to securities admitted to an exchange prior to March 1, 1934.

It would stipulate that an exchange may extend the privilege to any duly listed security, provided the security is listed on another national exchange and remains there listed.

In addition the bill provides that extensions of unlisted trade privileges shall not be made unless there is "sufficient trading activity in the vicinity of the exchange" to indicate that admittance to unlisted trading would be in the public interest.

2 Michigan Officials Get 4 Years in Jail

Detroit, Feb. 14 (AP).—Elmer B. O'Hara, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, and State Senator A. J. Wilkowski, today were sentenced by Judge W. McKay Skillman to serve from four to five years in the State prison of southern Michigan, for their part in a vote recount fraud.

O'Hara and Wilkowski were the first of 18 recount fraud defendants to be sentenced, for what was called an attempt to "steal" the 1934 election for State attorney general and secretary of State.

O'Hara, already shorn of his power as Democratic chairman by party leaders, also is under conviction in Macomb County on a charge of bribing a county drain commissioner in a land condemnation action. Sentence on this charge has been deferred, pending disposition of the recount fraud trials.

O'Hara, Wilkowski and the 16 others were convicted, after a trial lasting more than 11 weeks. Eight defendants were acquitted in the verdict announced last Saturday.

Salmon Week Calls Attention To Food Value

Fish Is High in Protein and Amino Acids, Vitamins and Minerals.

JUST at the time when busy meal-planners are turning their thoughts toward the preparation of Lenten meals comes the announcement that salmon week will be held this year February 28 to March 7, coinciding with the beginning days of Lent. "What advantage is a week celebrating salmon," asks the housewife? It is just one way of calling the menu planner's attention to the fact that canned salmon is an excellent choice for so many delightful and economical Lenten dishes.

So now is the time to add this valuable seafood to shopping lists and menus. This week-end buy several cans of salmon and store them away on your emergency pantry shelf. You will find that it is one of those foods that can be called on to supply an interesting dish to the daily menu as well as being a life-saver in case of an emergency.

Important Staple.

Salmon has long been an important staple throughout North America, an economical food, possessing high dietary values. These food values are coming to be more appreciated, as science analyzes the constituents of this seafood. The high protein of salmon is particularly valuable in the diet because it contains all the essential amino acids, without which growth and maintenance are impossible. The oils of salmon, in addition, are carriers of invaluable vitamins and minerals.

It is interesting to note that research workers of the United States Department of Agriculture have found that canned salmon is highly digestible with a record of 97 per cent digestibility of both the protein and fat.

Because of its high protein content, canned salmon is an excellent choice as a meat substitute, particularly during Lent when meat is taboo at least two days during every week in some homes.

Following are just a few of the many interesting recipes featuring canned salmon.

Salmon Chili.

Chop garlic or onion and fry until brown; shred 1 pound canned salmon and add to onion. Mix 1 can kidney beans and 1 can tomatoes, salt, pepper and chili powder to the fried mixture. Cook 15 minutes and thicken with flour which has been rubbed to a smooth paste with cold water. Cook down and serve piping hot.

Baked Salmon With Stuffing.

Drain 1 pound canned salmon and mix with one-half cup cracker crumbs, 1 egg unbeaten. Stuffing: Cook 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion in 1 cup boiling water 15 minutes. Add one-half teaspoon each of salt, celery salt, and paprika. Also liquor drained from salmon. Pour this over 2 slices stale white bread and 2 tablespoons corn meal. Cool. Beat well. Put half salmon mixture into greased pan—shaping like a cutlet. Pile stuffing on this (thicker in the center), shape the other half of the salmon mixture on top of stuffing. Strip with bacon. Cook in a moderate oven until browned. Garnish on hot platter, and serve with tomato sauce or white sauce flavored with sieved hard cooked eggs.

Salmon With Cheese.

Flake one pound canned salmon, season. Add ½ cup grated cheese and ¾ cup butter sauce, mixing all well together. Fill a casserole with this combination, covering with finely ground bread crumbs. Brown in oven. Make butter sauce as follows: Place ½ cup butter in saucepan. Add 2 tablespoons flour, mix until smooth then gradually add 1 pint boiling water, beating all the time. Add sprig of parsley, if desired.

Salmon With Mushroom Sauce.

2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon salt
Few grains pepper
1-3 cup chopped mushrooms
½ cup salmon

Melt butter, add flour, salt and pepper. Add hot milk, stirring to a smooth paste. Cook, stirring constantly, to a smooth sauce. Remove from the fire, add mushrooms, stir well. Add salmon, broken into pieces and stir only lightly to avoid mashing the fish. Serve on crisp toast or crackers. If necessary to keep hot until serving time, set over a pan of water and do not stir the mixture.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

CONTRARY to impressions throughout the country, men outnumber women employes in the executive branch of the Government in Washington by about six to four. Figures just released by the Civil Service Commission show there were, at the beginning of the new year, 68,034 men and 43,658 women in the executive branch, a total of 111,692 employes.

BAKER.

It is estimated there are approximately 156,000 persons in the District on the Federal payroll, including the legislative, judicial and military branches; and more than 13,500 District employes.

The following tables show the distribution of workers in various units of the executive branch, both civil service and non-civil service:

WHEN SPINACH SOUP BECOMES A NATIONAL FAVORITE It Must Be Good!

WHEN our soup chef put aside his ladle and said, "Here is a masterpiece," we expected something spectacular. But even our sunniest optimist didn't dream that this savory blend of rich cream and crisp young spinach would actually become a national favorite in the span of a few months. Naturally, for a soup to reach such dazzling heights of popularity so quickly, it must be good!

Heinz Cream of Spinach is an old-fashioned kind of soup—made to a treasured recipe and cooked the old-time home way. We take crisp, garden-green, fresh spinach and wash it thoroughly. We chop it fine, and add it, in generous quantities, to an open kettle of "thicker than whipping" cream.

We stir it, watch over it, and season it expertly with rare spices. When each small batch reaches its flavor peak, we seal it in spotless tins. The "home flavor" stays right there in the soup until you're ready to eat!

All of the 20 Heinz Home-style Soups are made this same slow, painstaking way. They're all ready to heat and serve. No mixing, no fussing. Our cooks do all the work—yours is the fun of eating! Get a few tins of Heinz Cream of Spinach Soup today—and expect loud "ohs" and "ahs" from your delighted family at dinner tonight!

Cheese True Democrat Among Foodstuffs—at Home in Any Course—First to Last

Helps to Make Combinations Of Many Kinds

Mixes With Potatoes, Rice, Macaroni and Other Staple Articles.

SOME foods are distinctly antisocial. If they cannot hold the center of the table by themselves, they are as disagreeable as possible, refusing to mingle with other foods and flavors. Some other foods take unto themselves a few choice friends, and will have nothing to do with common or garden variety edibles.

But the true democrat among foodstuffs is cheese. At home in any course—from soup to dessert—cheese scorns no other common food, but has an agreeable way of bestowing the distinction of its own personality upon the widest variety of dishes. If it could be said to have any particular favorites among the other foodstuffs which it adorns, rice, potatoes, macaroni, and other starch foods stand very high in its favor.

Macaroni and cheese—that ancient and honorable dish which is one of the most familiar of cheese dishes on American tables— has excellent reasons for popularity. Cheese with its high protein, and macaroni with its high carbohydrate values are an ideal pair. The same is true of cheese and rice—cheese and potatoes, cheese and bread. So many delicious dishes can be made with one of these combinations that every cook should add to her store of recipes featuring them. Not only from the standpoint of high food value, but from that of economy, the combination of rice and cheese, or macaroni and cheese is highly desirable.

Some kind of rice croquette is no doubt a favorite item in every recipe book. But an interesting variation on this familiar theme is a rice and cheese croquette. Formed with a small well right in the top of each croquette, these light and luscious cakes call out loudly for strawberry preserves. The combination is unusual, and one which requires tasting to appreciate its full flavor value. For a luncheon, or Sunday night supper, these croquettes are especially destined to become very popular.

Cheese and Rice Croquettes.

1 cup grated American cheese
¼ cup cracker crumbs
2 egg yolks
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper
Strawberry preserves

Cook the rice in boiling salted water; drain well. Add grated cheese, crumbs, beaten egg yolks and seasonings. Form into croquettes and make a depression in the top of each. Roll in fine dry crumbs, dip in beaten egg, roll in crumbs again and fry in deep, hot fat until golden brown. Place a spoonful of strawberry preserves in the depression in each croquette, and serve at once.

Mexican Rice Timbales.

Wash and drain three-fourths cup of raw rice. In skillet brown rice in three tablespoons butter. Place in top of double boiler, add small amount of water and steam until rice is tender. Add one tablespoon chopped onion and seasonings. Pack into buttered custard cups. Melt one-half pound Cheddar cheese in double boiler. Add one-third cup evaporated milk gradually, stirring. Unmold rice timbales on platter, pour hot cheese sauce over each. Serve with asparagus garnished with pimiento.

The following recipe shows just how attractive potatoes cooked with grated American cheese can be.

Potatoes O'Brien.

2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups milk
1 cup grated American cheese
Salt and pepper
½ small onion, chopped
½ green pepper, chopped
1 pimiento, chopped
4 medium size boiled potatoes.

Melt butter, stir in flour, add milk. Cook two minutes, add cheese, stir until cheese is melted, and season to taste. Add onion, green pepper and pimiento. Place a layer of diced potatoes in a buttered baking dish, then a layer of sauce, repeating alternately, with sauce on top. Bake 20 minutes in a moderate over (350 degrees Fahrenheit).

New Cheese and Rice Combination Wins Favor

Cheese, rice and strawberry preserves! Here is a group of ordinary ingredients combined in a new way to form a most delectable and satisfying dish. Cheese and rice are molded to form croquettes with a depression in each one. Each whole is filled with strawberry preserves. For the recipes, see the accompanying story.

Here's Advice On Preparing Meals for Two

Fish, Chops, Potatoes are Some of Answers to Problem of Food.

THE bride isn't the only one who finds it a problem to buy and cook little enough for two. The business girl who takes an apartment with another girl, and the housewife whose family has grown up and left home, are in a similar situation. Easy preparation is generally an important consideration in getting meals for two. Both persons may go out to work, or one may be giving time to social or other interests outside the home. Somehow it always seems less necessary to spend a lot of time cooking for just two than for a larger family.

The can-opener is often the business housewife's best friend, but it should not become a symbol of her housekeeping, because everyone needs some fresh-cooked vegetables and raw-vegetable salads to keep well. With little planning ahead, marketing and part-cooking can be done one day to permit rapidly preparing the next day's dinner.

Most recipes are written to provide a dish for six persons. Some of them can be conveniently halved or divided by three and some cannot. The small quantity of ingredients resulting might dry out instead of cooking nicely, or one might have difficulty with measurements like part of an egg or a fraction of a teaspoonful.

Dividing an egg need not be a difficult problem for the whole egg may be used in almost every case even though the other ingredients have been cut in half.

Meals for a two-person family cost relatively more than those for a large number. The United States Department of Agriculture explains why. This is not only because small-sized cans, packages and fractional weights cost proportionately more than larger containers or amounts in even weights. A supply of staples and seasonings must be kept on hand whether one caters for two or for six.

Besides recipes of the right size, cooking for two requires small-sized cooking utensils—small loaf pans, cup cake or muffin tins for 4 or 6 instead of 12, small bowls, saucepans and little casseroles for baking.

When it comes to choosing meats, the larger roasts are out, because they last too long. There are plenty of others well adapted to the family of two that may appear perhaps only once after the original cooking. How about a stuffed loin roast of veal made from a piece weighing 2 to 3 pounds? Shoulder roast of either veal or lamb are also delicious. So is a small pot roast of beef. Then there are tender chickens—weighing from 1¼ to 2½ pounds which may be fried, broiled or smothered. A calf heart en casserole is just enough for two.

Meats that can be bought in any desired quantity include stew, hamburger, meat loaf, sausage meat, kidneys, livers, sliced ham, chipped beef and frankfurters. Of course, chops of all kinds are the first thought for the two-person household or small steaks, but sometimes the moderate budget can better afford the first-mentioned meats.

Potatoes and a few other vegetables can appear at several successive meals in different forms. Small amounts of leftover spinach, carrots, celery, peas and other vegetables make good creamed soups. Some of them may appear in vegetable salads.

Fish is often convenient and economical because it can be bought in exactly the amount needed. Fillets and slices, whole panfish, and any of the canned fish are good buys—salmon, tuna, herring roe, or sardines.

Desserts that can be served in just the right amount with little trouble include all the canned and fresh fruits, dried fruits, cup cakes, tarts, jellies, tapioca mixtures, cornstarch puddings, mousses and other frozen mixtures made in a mechanical refrigerator.

The question of hot breads is one the cook will have to decide for herself. If she can juggle a roast and several vegetables and still take time to turn out a delicious hot bread, she can serve buscuits or muffins perhaps at less cost than bread, because they can be made up in quantity enough for two.

Dorothea Duncan has prepared a special bulletin on marketing hints and menus for two. To obtain your copy send your name, address and a stamp to her in care of The Washington Post.

Peanut Butter Is Delicious As Flavoring

Popular Food Can Be Used in Many Varied and Easy Recipes.

THE trouble with favorite flavors is that they are usually elusive things, if they are used with discretion. If not they lose their appeal. A flavor is added only to enchance the flavor of the dish. If the flavor appeals particularly to the palate, it is almost impossible for the appetite to be satisfied with one or even two servings of the favorite dish.

It is desirable then to have any number of recipes on file which call for your favorite flavor. Take peanut butter, for example. It is a food, as well as a flavor, but to many it is more appealing in the latter role. If this is the case, chalk up the following recipes immediately and try each one of them. Here peanut butter is used in the role of a novel flavoring. In the recipe for souffle it adds character to an old favorite.

Peanut Butter Souffle.

2-3 cup peanut butter
1 cup tomato juice
½ teaspoon onion juice
1 cup soft, stale bread crumbs
1 teaspoon salt
3 eggs

Mix together the first five ingredients, add the well beaten egg yolks and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Pour mixture into buttered baking dish and cook in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about 30 minutes. Serve with tomato sauce.

Peanut Butter Bread.

½ cup peanut butter
3½ cups bread flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
½ cup sugar
1 egg

Cream the peanut butter and sugar. Add the egg well beaten. Mix and sift the dry ingredients and add alternately with the milk. Beat the entire mixture well and place in well greased bread tin. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F) for about 50 minutes.

Peanut Butter Frosting.

2 cups sugar
½ cup water
½ cup corn sirup
2 ounces chocolate
2 tablespoons peanut butter

Mix the sugar and the water. Add the chocolate and corn sirup. Boil gently to the soft ball stage. Just before removing from the fire, add the peanut butter; then beat the mixture until it thickens enough to spread. Add one teaspoon of vanilla and spread on the cake.

Family's Size Should Govern Daily Purchases of Groceries

IF THE FAMILY is small and the cooking of meals is a bit irregular, it is important to select canned foods that will just about do for the meal intended, but if the family is an average one, eating at home day after day, then the suggestion of buying in quantities that will be sufficient for more than one meal is worth while.

For those families with large refrigerator space, buying large-size cans and keeping the unused portion in the refrigerator is economy and convenience, but if there is not adequate room for such storage, then foods should be purchased to be used up at one time.

Experience has been the common teacher in planning the number of servings of food from each can, but no doubt many have noticed in selecting canned foods recently that more and more information helpful in making the final selection is printed on the label.

The label tells how many halves or whole pieces there are in a can, as for instance, 7 to 11 halves of pears. That gives a basis for selecting the can containing just enough for the family.

Becoming familiar with container sizes and their contents in cupsful is convenient. Most servings should allow one-half cupful, and, of course, if there is a second serving, double the amount. With that in mind, the following chart may prove helpful.

Can Size.	Contents.
8 ounce	1 cup
Picnic	1¼ cups
No. 1	2 cups
No. 2	2½ cups
No. 2½	3½ cups
No. 3	4 cups
No. 10	12 cups

Eating Test Passed By Chicken Souffle

MAKING leftovers attractive is as simple as the proverbial apple pie when this recipe is used. It's tailor-made for the purpose. The eating test has been applied and the chicken souffle came through with more than one color flying.

This food is dainty and delicate and in all things pleasing. And don't start thinking it may be hard to prepare, because the opposite is true. We mention that because the name sounds fancy.

Chicken Souffle.

2 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons flour
½ cup chicken broth
1 cup evaported milk
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash of nutmeg
4 eggs
1½ cups cooked chciken, cut fine
½ cup coarsely chopped almonds

Make a thick white sauce of the butter, flour, broth and milk; season with salt and nutmeg. Remove from heat and beat in egg yolks one at a time. Set over boiling water and cook 3 minutes longer. Fold in chicken and almonds, then the stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn into a butttered baking dish, set in a pan of water. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) until set, about 40 minutes. Yield, 6 to 8 servings.

Film Stars Turn Back To Farming for Hobby

Soup doesn't grow and none of the movie stars raise coffee, but except for these two items, a pretty fair full-course dinner could be put together by the fair hands of the motion picture players.

Farming, cattle-raising, and poultry ranching occupy the spare time and most of the spare cash of a large section of the movie colony.

Film fans have read that Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler, Bing Crosby and Robert Montgomery are kept busy in their spare time raising sub-tropical fruits, that Victor McLaglen, Richard Dix and Charles Ruggles take great pride in their live stock and poultry ranches.

Newest recruits in the back-to-the-land movement were Mary Carlisle and Jean Harlow, both blondes, both with options on plantations in the Hawaiian Islands, both interested in cultivating sugar.

School Girls of London Fear Milk Is Fattening

London school girls are afraid that milk will make them fat, according to an Associated Press dispatch from London. More than 85,000 of them, says the chief medical officer of the board of education, spurned the special milk price of one cent for a third of a pint during 1935.

A questionnaire revealed that 33 per cent disliked milk "because it is fattening;" 1 per cent thought they were "too old" for it and 4 per cent preferred to spend their spare coppers on candy.

Vinegar Removes Stain.

Aluminum pans become discolored after foods or water containing iron or alkali have been cooked in them. To remove stain boil a solution of vinegar and water in the pan. Allow two tablespoons of vinegar for every quart of water used.

Dishwashing Hints.

Glass baking dishes will remain clear if you soak them first in hot water, then scrape off the softened food with a flexible spatula. Polish with a fine, scratchless scouring powder, wash in hot, soapy water, and rinse in hot water.

Critics Assail Navy as Britain Calls Veterans

Depleted Home Fleet Is Manned by Pensioners; Air Defense Doubted.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 14.—The British admiralty moved quietly to man its depleted home fleet today while defense debate raged in the House of Commons and the navy's ability to withstand aerial attacks was seriously questioned.

An order permitting pensioners to rejoin the navy reached fleet ports from the admiralty as the outgrowth of the massing of ships in the Mediterranean and the recommissioning of decommissioned craft for service in home waters.

Men in their fifties were invited to return to service at the home fleet base at Portland. In addition to retaining their pensions, they will also get the standard rate of pay.

Acute Depletion Disclosed.

The acuteness of the depletion was disclosed recently when one aircraft carrier and a few over-age destroyers and submarines temporarily comprised the entire home fleet.

While Commons "chose up sides" on the moot question of the efficacy of airplanes against battleships, the Naval Conference struggled to extricate itself from the complications of European politics.

A new deadlock was reported among the four powers—Britain, the United States, France and Italy—over what was described as a fresh effort to link the European political situation in deliberations of the conference.

The United States has firmly opposed such a move. Charles Corbin, French ambassador to London, went to Paris to get new instructions in an attempt to straighten out the situation.

Continued British alertness in the Mediterranean was emphasized by the arrival at Alexandria of a transport with a further contingent of troops almost on the eve of Anglo-Egyptian treaty discussions. In these the question of military occupation is the first to be tackled.

Declares Guns Not Effective.

In commons debate Rear Admiral Sir Curray Sueter asserted, "if anybody says anti-aircraft guns can stop an aerial bombardment, they do not have the faintest idea of what they are talking about."

"All our Southern ports are open to aerial bombardment," he added, urging the government "to create a ministry which would see that we are forging the right weapons of war, because many people are disturbed about that."

George Lambert, former civil lord of the admiralty, asserted the League of Nations had failed to stop increased armaments and that Britain could not rely on collective security—only on its right to arm.

"Europe today is one vast arsenal," he told the House. "Armaments are growing. They are in the charge of dictators and there is more loot in London than in Addis Ababa."

responsible for the assassination of the people of Caracas this morning."

Gen. Contreras is provisional president, pending regular elections in April. He became head of the government upon the death of Gomez.

Although the demonstration was called primarily in sympathy with the newspapers, the people are restless because of the government's failure to restore constitutional guarantees.

Under the regime of Gomez, editors feared to print even local police news, as there was no means of determining what the government might consider objectionable.

High School Student Hammer Attack Suspect

Danville, Ill., Feb. 14 (AP).—An assailant armed with a hammer attacked Everett A. Bates, an administrative officer, at his desk in the Danville High School today and left him unconscious with a skull fracture. Hospital attendants said he was near death.

The police said they sought for questioning a 16-year-old high school sophomore, Don Cunningham, whom Bates had threatened to expel for repeated absences.

Hunter College Swept By 4-Alarm Blaze

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—A four-alarm fire in Manhattan's most exclusive residential district today burned through three floors of historic Hunter College, largest woman's school in the United States. No students were in the building at the time.

Sprinkles Wet Streets.

San Francisco, Feb. 14 (AP).—Pedestrians blinked incredulously at a city street sprinkler working in the rain. Said the driver, Al Elliott, when questioned by an irate city official "why should I drive in and lose half a day's pay? I was told to sprinkle the streets—and I did. Is it my fault if it rains?"

Rigid Enforcing Of Church Curb Seen in Mexico

Official Concedes Part of Catholic Prelates' Claim of Persecution.

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, Feb. 14.—A high Mexican official said privately tonight the "religious laws will continue to be strictly enforced," in commenting upon a Catholic Church statement terming those laws "persecution."

Conceding the "truth of some statements" in a letter dispatched yesterday by the Mexican Catholic Episcopate, asking prelates of other nations to "pray for us," the official added:

"What the church fails to explain is that the present laws represent reaction from years when the church controlled Mexico, absolutely dominating the political life of the country."

Asked if the church would be allowed freedom to explain its viewpoint, and to attack educational and religious laws, he said "that depends upon the President."

Gen. Lazaro Cardenas, youngest President in Mexico's history, is absorbed in attempting to solve labor problems, it was generally believed, and will take no notice of church statements.

The government's viewpoint is that the church's power is limited by the constitution and state statutes, and that these will not be changed.

In yesterday's letter, Mexican prelates said the number of priests and churches is limited under these laws, that churches are the property of the nation, and that any home or building in which a religious ceremony is performed is subject to confiscation.

A strike movement continued to spread in the capital, increasing the current discord between employers and workers. Three more German establishments were closed, because they deal with a factory making goods for export to the Reich, at which a strike is now in progress.

It was announced that 83 drugstores will be closed tomorrow unless owners meet the demands of an employes' syndicate.

Cardenas, after settling two important strikes in Monterrey, left for Anahuac, Nuevo Leon State, to study an agricultural dispute. He announced he was going to Tampico Sunday in an effort to settle differences between labor unions.

Red Cross Man Says Group Was Surrounded, Couldn't Escape Ethiopians.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Feb. 14.—A foreign Red Cross representative said today 20,000 Italian soldiers had "been surrounded" in a huge battle recently on the northern front and "had no chance to come out alive."

He is Marius Brophil, an Irishman, who issued a statement to support the Ethiopian government's denial of official Italian figures that only 844 Italians have been killed since the war broke out.

The Ethiopian government claimed the bodies of more than 15,000 Italian troops were buried after the northern battle and 5,123 native soldiers.

Rome, Feb. 14 (AP).—An Italian defeat at an observation post in southeast Ethiopia was admitted today in an official communique, which claimed, however, two Fascist victories.

"Considerable Ethiopian forces February 10 attacked our observation post of 60 Dubats (native troops) at Curati, northwest of Gerlogubi, in Ogaden province, and overwhelmed them after the most stubborn resistance," the communique said.

"On the Somaliland front, near Ballei on the Gestro River, our detachment surprised an Ethiopian detachment retreating from Lama Scillindi and destroyed it, capturing arms almost entirely of British manufacture.

"On the Dawa River, our auto truck column attacked an enemy detachment near the wells of Bulbul Dirdib, 80 kilometers southwest of Negheili, inflicted losses and dispersed them."

Culbertson on Bridge

MR. CULBERTSON is acting as referee and reporter for a "grudge" bridge game. By general agreement he fines the players for their errors according to degree of stupidity: Class A errors cost them $1; class B, $2.50; class C, $5; class D, $10. This is the fifth hand in the series.

"What do you think of the game so far, professor?" East asked me.

"Well, let's see. There have been four hands played and each of you has been fined. In all, there have been eight fines for a total of $24. Hardly expert bridge! But at least no one has been given a class D assessment as yet. That's something."

"Please!" said North. "Don't even mention it. I'm superstitious!"

"Is that the trouble with your game?" asked East, who loved to heckle.

"Play cards!" growled North.

This was the hand:

North, dealer.

North-South vulnerable.

NORTH

♥ J 10 9 4 2
♦ K Q 5 4

EAST
♠ 10 8 2
♥ K Q 6 5 3
♦ 10 9
♣ 7 5 4

SOUTH
♠ K Q J
♥ A 7
♦ A J 8 7 2
♣ K J 8

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 club	Pass	2 diam'ds	Pass
2 spades	Pass	3 clubs	Pass
3 spades	Pass	4 no tr'mp	Pass
5 no tr'p	Pass	7 clubs [final bid]

There was, of course, no play whatsoever for the contract. North's losing diamond had to be conceded for the setting trick.

"Aha!" said East, rubbing his hands. "How much does the kitty collect this time, and from whom?"

"North will kindly shell out $10!" I answered. "His opening club bid, followed by a spade bid and rebid, was a class D error. South was not only entirely blameless, but I would have fined him for bidding less than seven. North's bidding, if correct, clearly showed a six card club suit and a five card spade suit. South's holding in both solidified the suits for eleven tricks, and his two red aces accounted for the other two. The four-five no-trump convention located all the aces. At the worst, if North's club suit was missing the queen and he held a red king for compensation, the grand slam still would have better than an even chance."

"I knew, when you mentioned that no class D error had been committed, that I'd be the goat," said North plaintively. "I told you I was superstitious!"

Strong Brew May Be Caused By Stained Pot

Observance of Strict Rules Will Insure Fine Flavor by Any Method.

By Dorothea Duncan.

DO you insist that your way of making coffee is the one and only way? Do you scorn all new "fan-dangled" notions of percolators and drip coffee pots and stick to the decision that boiled coffee is best? Or are you on the other side, waving away all coffee pot claims and betting on your brand of coffee to make the most fragrant amber colored brew of them all?

Naturally a good beverage can't be produced from stale or inferior coffee. But before you blame the coffee take a look into your coffee pot or check up on your method of preparing the beverage before you change your brand. If your coffee pot is clean and your method faultless and still your coffee doesn't suit your taste, it is time to investigate a new brand.

Keep Pot Clean.

If a coffee pot is not absolutely clean it may be the cause of your trouble. Remember that scrupulously clean equipment is necessary for uniformly good coffee, regardless of what the equipment may be. A slender brush is indispensable for spouts, crevices and grooves, and percolator tubes that cannot otherwise be reached. Wash the pot and all parts with clean, hot soapy water. Then rinse with boiling water, drain and dry before putting away. This procedure should be used after every pot of coffee is made.

Keep the coffee pot bright and free from stains. The sediment that collects on the inside, even in small amounts, affects delicate flavor of coffee and should be removed by scouring. Use a scouring material suitable for your type of pot. Washing with soap and water is not always sufficient.

If a cloth filter or bag is used, it should be kept clean by washing it thoroughly after each time it is used with water and baking soda and without soap. Rinse well and keep it submerged in a bowl of clean, cool water. Remove sizing from new bag by rinsing in clear water before using.

Essential Rules.

No matter what type of coffee pot you may use, there are several essential rules for coffee making which apply to every case. Follow these general rules carefully, for they are essential every time. Always use water, freshly drawn, for making coffee. Always measure both coffee and water to obtain the same strength each time coffee is made. Never allow coffee to boil. Actual boiling develops bitterness and destroys both flavor and aroma. The oils, which give coffee its delicate fragrance and flavor, escape in steam as coffee boils, and changes take place which bring out a bitter or sour taste. The best temperatures for coffee making are below boiling (185 degrees F. to 203 degrees F.) The necessity of a clean pot has already been stated.

Coffee grounds should be removed from coffee as soon as it is made. Coffee is at its best when served directly after preparing, for if it stands and must be reheated some of the fragrance and flavor is lost.

One heaping tablespoon of coffee for each standard measuring cup of water is the usual amount of coffee used for each method of preparation. The amount will vary, however, according to the preference of the person who drinks it. A level tablespoon to one cup of water will make a weaker coffee. Two level tablespoons of coffee to one cup of water makes quite a strong coffee.

For information concerning the charming new streamlined coffee pot illustrated call Dorothea Duncan, NAtional 4280, or write to her, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, in care of The Washington Post.

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR NATURAL "BULK"
Needed to Correct Constipation*
Most people recognize the seriousness of constipation. But too often they dose themselves with strong cathartics that often actually lead to chronic constipation.
The natural way to check common constipation is to correct the condition which causes it—usually, insufficient "bulk" in meals.
How can you get "bulk"? Fruits and vegetables have some. Bran has more. The most popular product of this kind is Kellogg's ALL-BRAN.
The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is gentle in action. ALL-BRAN also supplies vitamin B and iron.
This delicious cereal is a wholesome food. Serve ALL-BRAN regularly for regularity, with milk or cream—or use in cooking.
Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily will usually correct constipation due to insufficient "bulk." If not relieved, see your doctor.
ALL-BRAN gives you gentle internal exercise. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Music, Melodrama and Romance Provide Vivid Highlights of New Theater Bills

'Rose Marie' Melodic Gem; Screen Stars at Earle; Other Programs.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"ROSE MARIE." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the operetta by Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein 2d, with music by Rudolph Friml and Herbert Stothart, adapted to the screen by Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett and Alice Duer Miller, costarring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, with Reginald Owen, Allan Jones, Alan Mowbray, Gilda Gray, George Regas, Robert Greig, Una O'Connor, Lucien Littlefield and Herman Bing. Dance ensembles staged by Chester Hale; additional lyrics by Gus Kahn. Directed by Woody S. Van Dyke. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization last season of Victor Herbert's tuneful "Naughty Marietta," superlatively excellent as it was, now may be looked upon as nothing more than a tuning up exercise for the multiplied perfections of this majestically set, handsomely acted and gloriously sung screen version of the Rudolf Friml operetta that enjoyed so huge a success on the stage. It is infinitely better here than it was there.

The story, to be sure, has been elaborated, a new tune or two has been added and the lines have been padded out slightly to meet the exigencies of the play's expanded form, but basically the narrative remains the same and intrinsically it has increased tremendously in entertainment value.

Moves to North Woods.

The wide scope of the silver sheet makes it possible to inaugurate the action with an authentic interval of grand opera that in itself assumes impressive proportions. The action then progresses to the Canadian north woods where the great diva seeks her wounded brother on whose head the Northwest Mounted have placed a reward as the murderer of one of their officers in a prison break.

It is here that the picture takes on the far-flung grandeur of a rugged mountain country that serves as a fitting background for the tense human interest of the drama and the inspiring quality of its music.

There is something about the spectacle of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police charging into the camera with Nelson Eddy singing the "Song of the Mounties," with a rousing male chorus in support, that is genuinely exciting. The song, the setting and the action have been so perfectly harmonized and co-ordinated that the scene becomes a classic of lyric drama.

It is not possible to say less of the stirring cadences of "Rose Marie, I Love You," "I Belong to You, You Belong to Me," "Indian Love Call" and all of the other melodious gems that are sprinkled through the action of a play which, without any music whatsoever, would be as thrilling as, say, Willard Mack's "Tiger Rose."

Stars in Fine Voice.

Neither Miss MacDonald nor Mr. Eddy ever has been in better voice than in this tremendously effective filmization of a stage production that has been enhanced in appeal by its new treatment.

The supporting cast embraces many names that need only be recited to insure the integrity of the picture to those who habitually gaze at screens—Reginald Owen, Alan Mowbray, Lucien Littlefield, Alan Jones, George Regas, as the sneak-thief, half-breed guide; Una O'Connor and Herman Bing all contribute performances that serve to create and maintain a high standard of histrionic skill throughout the development of the play.

Not the least of the film's outstanding features is the corn festival and totem pole dance created by Chester Hale and executed with a weird and wild abandon by hundreds of Indian tribesmen as an incidental bit of atmosphere after the action has transplanted itself from Montreal to the northern wilderness.

Van Dyke Genius.

There is, as a matter of fact, a constant demonstration during the course of "Rose Marie" of the remarkable versatility and change of pace that Woody Van Dyke is able to bring to the direction of every picture he undertakes. I place this among the foremost of his major achievements.

A deft musical treatment also has been accorded this subject, even when no songs are being sung. We usually object to the employment of invisible orchestras, chorals and the like, when the pictured scene has no place in which they might reasonably be, but here a subdued musical undertone frequently helps immensely in pointing the intent of the drama.

An especially interesting and complete release of the Metrotone News and an exceedingly amusing cartoon comedy in natural color are the foremost of the subsidiaries of a bill that is unreservedly recommended to every discriminating seeker after entertainment that rises far above the commonplace and establishes itself in the upper brackets of artistry and charm.

"THE LADY CONSENTS." RKO-Radio picturization of a story by P. J. Wolfson, with screen play by the author and Anthony Veiller, starring Ann Harding, supported by Herbert Marshall, Margaret Lindsay, Walter Abel, Edward Ellis, Hobart Cavanaugh and Ilka Chase. Directed by Stephen Roberts. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Were one to recount the story of "The Lady Consents," two charges could be entered against the perpetrator of such detail: that the story is too, too familiar and that Ann Harding surely must play the lead. And both charges would have to be answered in the affirmative, for not only is this story of husband-wife-other-woman complications more than twice-told, but it is the type of vehicle not heretofore undecorated by the person and personality of Miss Harding.

But the amazing thing about "The Lady Consents" is that the star raises a rather trite story and ordinary playwriting to heights far beyond the intrinsic value of their well-known dramatic developments.

Through sheer histrionic artistry, in which is included a timbre of voice alone transcending many a hackneyed superficiality, Miss Harding dominated the story of a wife happily married to a distinguished physician for seven years, only to have him become infatuated by a pretty face and figure, to the point of divorce.

Marshall Is Co-Star.

As that husband, Herbert Marshall matches his acting power with the star's, and together they form as smooth functioning and acting team as has been formed in many a moon. Both finished artists, and particularly in the type of drama here considered, Miss Harding and Mr. Marshall combine their efforts to make this picture the satisfying entertainment it is.

The other woman is played by Margaret Lindsay, with sufficient accent on her gold-digging propensities to make her aim definite. Edward Ellis, as Mr. Marshall's father, has a choice part, as the one through whose efforts the climactic reconciliation largely is effected. Walter Abel is the willing but unacceptable suitor. Hobart Cavanaugh has a small but well played role.

"Time Marches On."

Topping the supplementary program is the eleventh issue of "The March of Time," here reaching its ultimate to date in discursive presentation of current events. Included are discussions of Russian central stores and Stakhanovism, of the Hartman formula for the alleviation of pain during cavity-filling "brutalities" of dentists, and of the work and following of Harlem's Father Devine, especially in the field of politics.

Rather drab in comparison with some of the spectacular earlier issues of "The March of Time," this eleventh release is nonetheless informative, expertly devised and effectively presented.

"Beach Masters" is a commentary on seals and their breeding season on Mist Island in the Aleutian Islands, with Gayne Whitman describing the early natural history of milady's coat and neckpieces.

A release of the Pathe News rounds out a program that can be unreservedly recommended.

Loew's Fox

"IT HAD TO HAPPEN." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by Rupert Hughes, adapted to the screen by Howard Ellis Smith and Kathryn Scola, featuring George Raft, Rosalind Russell, Leo Carrillo, Arline Judge and Alan Dinehart. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

Dave Appolon has brought the best show to F street since—Dave Appolon last played the Fox.

If there is a synonym for this ebullient little Russian, it must be "sure-fire, pleasant, show-stopping entertainment." He never promises more than he brings, and he always brings a very great deal.

This trip he has just enough of the old routine to be pleasantly familiar and welcome-backish, plus a number of extra-special new items.

The very extraist extra, to our way of thinking, is the delightful Spanish gentleman—a ventriloquist who is both himself and his dummy (you'll understand when you see him), and who is perfectly grand. We have the deepest affection for that little dummy—the realest nonexistent person we ever didn't see!

Versatile Talents.

Then there is Johnny Woods, an excellent and brisk young imitator; Ruth del Rio, a graceful and alluring dancer, and Sarah Ann McCabe, with a rather lovely voice which she might handle a little better. Other newcomers are Olive White, singer, and a very agile dusky young tapster.

Of the old friends, there are the beautifully costumed and well trained dancing girls; Melissa Mason, with the longest and most amazing legs; the Hawaiian string orchestra, with Harold Aloma, of the fine voice and melodious guitar; the bounding Arabs, and Dave, who has more energy, enthusiasm and personality in his pint-sized person than three or four others could handle.

The Cinema Stumbles.

And oh, yes; there is a movie. It's title comes right out and says, "It Had to Happen," but we don't see why it did. A weak and silly story to begin with—the immigrant boy who rises like a jumping jack in politics and weds the great, rich lady. George Raft changes expression twice, but inflection never.

Roselind Russell is very pretty and tries, but you can't make us believe she had a good time trying.

Leo Carrillo, bless him, is always amusing, even in such lugubrious surroundings, and Arline Judge is downright cute and brisk in her few minutes. Alan Dinehart looks surprised throughout, and it's not a becoming expression.

But don't let this moan keep you away from Dave and his swell crew. Just be sure to consult your time schedule carefully and remember, the stage show is The Show this week.

Metropolitan

With the stage play of "Ceiling Zero" indelibly stamped in one's memory, it is with a certain amount of trepidation that the screen version of the drama is viewed, even though the original author is responsible for the scenario and the ace of air-drama directors handles the megaphone, for this dead opus seems not to be particularly the type of work adapted to the talents of Pat O'Brien and James Cagney.

But our fears were largely unfounded, for in the unfolding of the cinematized "Ceiling Zero" a remarkable transcription is visible and, save for a few instances, is highly comparable with the original stage play.

The leading players are fine and, within their own powers of delineation, contribute characterizations which will linger long in the memory. The supporting cast, too, especially Stuart Irwin, June Travis and Isabel Jewell are excellent.

Is Sure-Fire.

To the followers solely of the cinema in general and the O'Brien-Cagney opera in particular, "Ceiling Zero" is sure-fire entertainment, with the added quality of being unique in that Mr. Cagney not only does not get the girl, but at the finale commits suicide in the cause of science and self-mortification.

The producers—with Lieut. Comdr. Wead and Director Hawks—erred in the finale on the side of offering too much realism and to a large extent missing the consummate dramaturgy of the original drama upon the stage.

"Some Class" presents Charles Ahearn as the instructor in a hobo school, a comedy of interest. The combined releases of Paramount and Universal news reels, offer 15 minutes of diverting "news scoops," including scenes from the funeral of former Vice President Charles Curtis.

Columbia

"THE BRIDE COMES HOME." Paramount picturization of a story by Elisabeth Sanxay Holding, with screen play by Claude Binyon, starring Claudette Colbert, supported by Fred MacMurray, Robert Young, William Collier, sr., Donald Meek, Richard Carle, Johnny Arthur, Bob McKenzie, Eddie Dunn, Jerry Mandy, A. S. Byron, Edgar Kennedy, Kate MacKenna, James Conlon and Edward Gargan. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Return engagement.

"LITTLE AMERICA." Paramount release, picturing the second Antarctic expedition of Admiral Richard E. Byrd, with narration written by Charles J. V. Murphy, spoken by Gayne Whitman. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Falling a bit short of the earlier achievement in cinematography and thrilling narration in offering the camera report of the first Antarctic expedition of Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd, "Little America" presents a document of considerably more than passing academic interest.

In this account of the recently ended second exploration in the South Polar regions, the picture offers a fascinating 36 minutes of unusual scenes and experiences; notable among them being the alpha and omega of Admiral Byrd's lone seven-months' vigil studying not only the effects of isolation on the human species but the climatological conditions obtaining at the bottom of the world.

Photographed by Paramount's John L. Herrman and Carl O. Peterson, with Gayne Whitman reading the narrative prepared by Charles J. V. Murphy, "Little America" is a subject of genuine significance which forms an admirable addition to the program.

Comedy Comes Back.

The ostensible feature of the program is, however, "The Bride Comes Home," a repeat engagement of the picture starring the charming Claudette Colbert, with Fred MacMurray and Robert Young.

A "depression drama" of the fallen financial mighty, it is an agreeable vehicle for Miss Colbert to show forth those light comedy talents so manifest in "It Happened One Night" and others of like ilk.

Entirely innocuous comedy-drama it possesses considerable entertainment which, with "Little America" and a release of the Metrotone News, forms a program which is radically diversified and engrossing.

The Heroine of "Rose Marie"

Not only is this smiling young woman the heroine, but she also is the golden-voiced prima donna of the picturized version of the famous operetta now on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. She is, as goes without saying, Jeanette MacDonald. Co-starred with her is Nelson Eddy, possessed of one of the finest voices now before the public. They were together, it will be recalled in "Naughty Marietta" and far surpass their earlier work in their present vehicle, which is superlative in every respect.

5 Groups Offer Tourney Plays; 4 Get in Finals

Roosevelt High School Is Scene of Contests by Community Center.

The tenth annual One-Act Play Tournament conducted by the Community Center Department rounded out the preliminary contests Thursday in Roosevelt High School when the final five entries were presented for consideration by the judges.

The Wesley Heights Players presented the twice postponed "Job's Kinfolk," by Loretta C. Bailey, directed by Mrs. Aura Fike Jones and Mrs. John Ladd; the Eckington Community Players offered Anton Chekhov's "The Boor," directed by Elizabeth Beatty; the Southeast Community Players presented "Pot Boiler," by Alice Gerstenberg, directed by Alice Tams; the Montgomery Players offered "The House With the Twisty Windows," by Mary Pakington, directed by Helen D. Pyle, and the Masquers of Sligo Park Hills presented Percival Wilde's "Dawn," directed by Mrs. Leonard A. Schuttig.

The somewhat allegorical "Job's Kinfolks," which opened the evening's parade, was played by Anette Ladd, Lucia Englehart, Louise Ervin, Margaret Graham and Roy Miller, with Miss Ladd, as the grandmother, giving the best performance of the group.

Miller in Title Role.

"The Boor" presented George Miller in the title role, with Catherine Cronenberg, as the young widow beset by the officious creditor. Irving Ginsberg, taking the place of Vernon Lyden, did well by the servant role.

"Pot Boiler," a play of a play in rehearsal under the direction of the author, was the best comedy of the series, although the company was not always sure of itself in what would otherwise have been devastatingly funny situations. Harry Quirk was the producer-author-director and did a commendable job, with Jack Sherry, Betty Hunter, Cleo Wimes, Joseph C. Watts, Bill Rigney, and R. Chester Calwell performing in the other roles.

With a Russian flavor was "The House with the Twisty Windows" with Irving M. Day dominating the scene with his delineation of a whimsical author who gives his life to save his brother who has soap-boxed against the "cause." Others in the cast included Russell Nicholson, J. A. Bishop, Margaret B. Keyhoe, Maxine Mitchell, Margaret J. Buckley and Clifton A. Whyte.

"Dawn" was the final play of the preliminaries, closing the parade with a decided boom as a pint of TNT was supposed to send George Webster to perdition, and Gladys Wight and William Wight somewhere else when Marjorie Wiley was found. A tense drama of man's inhumanity to woman, the play, especially in its stagecrafty denouement, proved a fitting conclusion to the tournament.

The evening's proceedings were prefaced by a brief concert by the Community Center Civic Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Samuel Page Ford. W. A. W.

Four Chosen for Finals.

"The Dreamy Kid," "Sintram of Skagerrak," "The Game of Chess," and "Pot Boiler" were the four plays selected Thursday for finalists in the tenth annual One-Ace Play Tournament, earlier presented, respectively by the Little Theater of Alexandria, the Bartfield Players, the Theater Group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Southeast Community Center.

In announcing the judges' decision, Mrs. William C. Johnson, chairman, paid brief tribute to the tournament entrants as a whole, as also did Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the Community Center Department, while the judges were deliberating.

Acting honors of the tournament were accorded Hugh M. Smythe, of the Little Theater of Takoma Park, for his superlative delineation of the deformed artisan in "The Violin Maker of Cremona."

Besides Mrs. Johnson, the judges were C. Melvin Sharpe, Dr. Patrick J. Lennox, Henry G. Roberts and Dr. M. C. Batchelder.

As the pudges of the finals, to be held at Rooseevlt High School this evening, the dramatic editors of Washington's newspapers will officiate.

During the interval following the final play, Tournament Charman Dorothy J. Lewis presented the directors of the severay plays presented. The Schubert Singers—a male octette—rendered a program of songs, under the direction of Mrs. Chester Adair.

Court Order Restrains Labor Board Activities

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Feb. 14 (AP).—Federal Judge George C. Scott issued a preliminary injunction today prohibiting the national labor relations board from further prosecuting a labor complaint against the Iowa Manufacturing Co., of Cedar Rapids.

The company is accused of discharging three employes for unionizing activity following a strike at the company's plant last August.

Judge Scott based his ruling on the company's claim that the national labor relations act violates the fifth (due process of law) and tenth (States' rights) amendments to the Federal Constitution.

Essay on Rain.

Miami Beach, Feb. 14.

WRITERS addicted to whimsy in their compositions have made much of rain . . . You have heard it described as the clean rain, the brave rain, the adventuresome rain, the honest rain . . . Writers have worked themselves into a veritable lather of adjectives in telling their spiritual reactions to a tramp in the country with the wet rain blowing in their faces . . . Others have belabored the typewriter keys to liken the sound of rain on the roof to the pitter patter of baby footsteps, or to fancy that the drops of rain are tears from heaven . . . Far be it from this reporter to rob these whimsical writers of their whimsy . . . Far be it from me to point out that a tramp in the country is nothing more or less than a tramp from the city who is not on relief . . . However, let's look at the record! I have been here ten days . . . Eight days of the ten were cloudy and cold . . . The ninth day the sun shone down . . . Today, the tenth day, I awoke to find the murky heavens dropping large, damp drops of rain all over the landscape and I am burning.

The primary purpose of a trip to Florida is a bronze suntan . . . That is why people come to this State, for here, in the dead of winter, you win a summer benediction . . . Returning to the frozen North, your suntan excites envy and commotion . . . People point you out on Broadway . . . At night clubs and theaters your appearance stirs a chorus of whispers . . . You have become one of nature's noblemen . . . That, I repeat, is the general purpose of coming to this State . . . But here it is the tenth day of my sojourn, and I am now paler than when I arrived . . . Outside the rain is sloshing down and plopping miserably against the window panes . . . Inside the room, I sit dejectedly at my typewriter, surrounded by the bottles of the vile-smelling liquids which I have endured because they guaranteed to convert my pale skin into an acre of mahogany tints . . . Nature's nobleman? . . . Phooey . . . I am a Knight of the Bath, pale, wan, wet and indignant.

Fleeing from the rain, we return to the Hialeah Race Track . . . . This is some distance from here, but easily found because of the gnashing of the metallic teeth of the pari mutuel machines . . . These mechanical monsters have tremendous appetites and eat nothing but money, preferring long green to Popeye's spinach diet . . . Far into the night, I studied the mystifying symbols and asterisks of the racing index, and so I go boldly to the track, with my selections tucked away in a brief case . . . I do not see how I can lose . . . The horses I have picked are intelligent, high-geared animals . . . Of that, I'm confident . . . Only thing that can defeat me are the jockeys who will ride these animals . . . I do not know whether these jockeys have been living the right life, or whether they are imbued with the will to win, which is very important . . . For my $2 bet, it is imperative that the jockey possess this high purpose, or all is lost, including the two dollars, my brief case, my selections and my faith in thoroughbred nature.

You meet a better class of people at the race track . . . Attorney General Dave Wilentz was chatting with one of those superior thinkers yesterday . . . A plunger who is supposed to have lost $500,000 in the past year . . . "How did you happen to lose all that money on the horses?" asked Wilentz . . . "It's very easy to explain," said the plunger . . . "Ten years ago, I made my first bet of $10 on the horses. I've lost $500,000 trying to get back my ten dollars."

Georgia Ellis, former Ziegfeld "Follies" eyeful, is the most successful bettor in this place . . . She located a chap here who is the counterpart of the little fellow in "Three Men on a Horse" . . . He gives her information that is positively uncanny, and she has been cleaning up on long shots . . . In return, she makes one $5 bet for him every day . . . "If you bet more than that you'll put the jinx on me," he assured her, soberly . . . The superstitions of the race track are not to be lightly ignored.

Atlantic Seaboard Notes: Pilot Dick Merrill is here, convalescing . . . Lou Holtz swore off the geegees after dropping a $1,000 bet on Fidelis . . . That means he'll be betting this afternoon . . . Walter Reade, Lou Davis, Mrs. Joe Moss, the Harry (Wall Street) Andersons, Jack Ardis and his bride; Bobby Martin, who is Mary Brown's ex; Fred Baehler's mother and dad, Major Albert Warner, Velma Lewis, Marie Hammans are some of the New Yorkers here . . . Teddy Troy's brother cashed a big bet on Count Me . . . Al Pearce goes into the Palace, at Chicago, tomorrow with everybody rooting for him . . . Locals upset by the news that Jack Benny is ailing in New York . . . Ramon Ramos is clicking big at the Forge . . . Miss Ella Logan is due to arrive any minute . . . Elmer Leterman has the best tan of any of us, and everybody hates him for it . . . Hugh Pickering and Merry Fahrney are back together again.

Elizabeth Arden's racing stable goes under the racing name of Mr. Nightingale . . . Trainers and jockeys are a bit puzzled by the Arden racing stratagems . . . She believes implicitly in her own beauty preparations, and like as not, before a big race, she will insist that the jockey have his hair marcelled . . . At that, I think the pari mutuels should have their faces lifted.

Storm Takes Toll In Pennsylvania

Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 14 (AP).—Snow slides buried automobiles and trucks, blocked highways and delayed trains in Pennsylvania today after an all-night sleet and snow storm.

Twelve buildings in eight scattered cities caved in under the weight of snow, causing damage estimated at $70,000.

Roofs of garages in Lebanon, Chambersburg, Sunbury, Lewistown, Allentown, Harrisburg and Mechanicsburg collapsed, damaging at least 77 cars. Four other small buildings in Mechanicsburg and a planing mill at Middleburg were damaged.

Calls for help were received at the capital from Millersburg, where snow slides virtually buried nearly a score of trucks and smaller cars. No one was injured.

100 Steal Coal to Keep Families Warm; 12 Held

Creston, Iowa, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Twelve men were held and other arrests were anticipated tonight, after 100 men raided Burlington Railroad coal supplies for fuel to keep their families warm.

Hand sleds, toy wagons, tubs and sacks were brought to carry away the coal, officers said. Homes of six of the men were entirely without fuel, because of Iowa's coal shortage, due to the bad weather.

An estimated 15 tons of coal were stolen.

27,370 Given Aid in Month, Report Shows

6,143 Families on Relief in January; Is Slight Decrease.

Total Is 5.6% of City's Population; Work Outlook Dark.

The Public Assistance Division of the Board of Public Welfare gave relief to 6,145 families of 23,848 persons during the month of January, in spite of the Work Progress Administration program. In addition, there were 3,722 unattached persons, bringing the total number of persons on relief to 27,370 persons.

This number represents 5.6 per cent of the total population of the District. Of this number 31.2 were white and 68.8 per cent were colored.

Slight Decrease Noted.

In spite of the fact that many people secured employment either in industry or in the WPA, there was only a slight decrease in the number of cases on relief.

During the month, he said, 2,130 cases were closed as no longer needing relief. To offset this, there were 440 new cases placed on the relief rolls and 1,423 cases previously closed had to be reopened.

At the close of the month 8,953 cases were actually receiving relief. Of this number 4,023 cases had no employable person in the family. Over 1,500 applications for relief were rejected because they were not eligible or there was no actual need of relief.

Expenditures of $237,821.

Cash relief expenditures for January were $237,821. All phases of relief cost $276,023. The average sum received by each case was $27.28.

Total expenditures for direct relief, administration and social service were $333,490. The cost of administration and social service was $51,960.

Walsh Predicts Bitter '36 Political Campaign

The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, of Georgetown University, as he began another series of popular lectures last night at the university.

Priest Declares 'Conflict of Passions' Will Recall Struggle of Pre-Civil War Days; Crowd at Georgetown University Hears Talk.

The political campaign of 1936 will witness a "conflict of passions and ideas" similar to that which characterized the Lincoln-Douglas debates in the era preceding the Civil War, the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., author-priest, told a large crowd at Georgetown University last night.

Democracy in America, he said, is at one of the major crossroads in the evolution of the country's social and political destiny.

Father Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University, was delivering the first of his annual series of lectures.

He sharply criticized the New Deal for its haste, its "immature" legislation, lack of direction. But at the same time he insisted both major parties have been guilty of "economic folly" and the "tendency to excess."

Describing America of the boom days, Father Walsh said:

"We had achieved in the United States a towering civilization characterized by material achievements, by size, speed, motion and inventive ingenuity. We cultivated the spirit of things and ignored the things of the spirit. What we worshiped most betrayed us worst.

"Bewitched and fascinated by gadgets, great and small, we would be satisfied only with the biggest and the most—the tallest buildings (to dispute the upper air with the birds), the fastest trains, the most automobiles of any land, more abundant telephones, open plumbing in pastel shades, more razors than faces and the most gorgeous barber shops on the planet . . ."

Not to be outdone, Father Walsh said, even the criminals expanded their operations.

"When retribution finally took charge in 1929," continued Father Walsh, "we ran true to form again and achieved the biggest and most resounding crash in the world. The echo resounded in every bourse from China to Peru. That was followed by the biggest public repentance in the annals of folly, expiated at the highest cost in the history of public finance, with the most intricate and immature legislation ever devised by the mind of man and accompanied by the severest rebuke from a Supreme Tribunal ever administered to a government in power.

"Recent developments in the United States demonstrate that the problems now confronting the American people have passed beyond purely economic issues and are affecting fundamental concepts of government, of organized society, or democracy itself, and the very meaning of liberty. These important issues are being seized upon by a political parties to an extent that indicates a return to the high debate tha characerized he formation and the preservation of the Union.

"But the language and the epithets are drawn from a modern vocabulary, the button off the foils —and the points envenomed too. It is extremely dubious if the present crisis and mounting uncertainty will be dissipated by the easy device of hurling Billingegate against opponents or didiculing the personality of dissenting adversaries.

Both Parties to Blame.

"The basic conflict derives from world conditions and from diverse origins. It antedates Franklin Roosevelt and a Democratic administration, neither was it caused by Herbert Hoover aided and abetted by Republican rascals. Both political parties in the heydey of exuberance were equally guilty of economic folly since both shared the common tendency to excess; both were addicted to identical business practices. Both parties knew how to read the ticker tape in 1929.

"The nature of man is not more corrupted by Republicans than it is purified by Democrats. The rascality that thrived during Andrew Jackson's Administration and the continuing technique of Tammany Hall had little to learn from Mark Hanna and the Harding regime. None of them have been Galahads when it was popular to be Machiavellis. The plain truth of the matter is that impartial time and the logic of historic events have brought Democracy in America to one of the major crossroads in the evolution of ous social and political destiny."

To illustrate his own reaction to the New Deal, Father Walsh quoted from an interview he granted last week in St. Louis, which follows in part:

"Are you in favor of the New Deal?"

"Too complicated to answer offhand. The New Deal is not only a political program but a philosophy of government, an economic theory, a social evangel, and a daring adventure in public finance.

New Deal Baffling.

"One would have to be a simultaneous reincarnation of Aristotle, Plat, Justinian, Blackstone, Adam Smith, Hamilton, Jefferson, Webster, Lincoln and Karl Marx to do it justice. Even the Supreme Court is obliged to answer guardedly, step, by step, with long breathing spaces in between."

Asked in St. Louis about his "broad reaction" to the New Deal, Father Walsh, said:

"Again, you must specify a bill of particulars. The banking crisis was handled admirably and courageously. I have always felt that there we had Mr. Roosevelt at his true best. But certain overheated imaginations, like that excited suitor—in the story, leaped into the saddle of emergency and dashed madly off in all—directions. They had a finer sense of motion than they did of direction."

The interview, as repeated by Father Walsh, wound up in this way:

Q. Father Walsh, are you a Democrat or a Republican?"

A. Neither. I am only a resident of the District of Columbia.

Textbooks Exhibited to Support Charges of Communism.

Anticipating a strong demand for modification if not repeal of the anti-communism rider on the next District day in the House, Chairman Blanton, of the House sub-committee on appropriations and author of the rider, is seeking to block the Sisson bill in the House District Committee, it was learned yesterday.

Several members of the committee believed to be sympathetic with the anti-red rider, it was learned, have been called into the sub-committee hearing room to see some of the textbooks which the Federation of Citizens Associations has labeled pro-communistic.

Among these are Representatives Patman, of Texas; Carpenter, of Kansas, and Werner, of South Dakota, all Democrats, and all members of the House District Committee.

Meanwhile, Blanton denied yesterday a rumor that he had suggested a "gentleman's agreement" with Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools.

The report current on Capitol Hill was that Blanton had promised to insert funds in the District supply bill for construction of a new senior high school to relieve congestion at Eastern High School if the superintendent would withdraw his opposition to the anti-Red rider.

"There is absolutely no truth in that report," Blanton said. "I am very sympathetic regarding the condition at Eastern High School, and so far as my one vote is concerned I am going to do everything I can to relieve this situation."

Blanton also denied the report that he had submitted a questionnaire to Dr. Ballou regarding the administration of the anti-communism proviso.

"The only questions I asked," the Texan said, "were in the committee room."

That the anti-red rider has occupied much of the time of the budget hearings is apparent from the piles of textbooks on the sub-committee's tables.

Several history books against which the Federation Citizens Associations had objected to were among the books and they all had book marks.

Blanton recently in one of his lectures to District officials remarked:

"Why, you should no more teach communism in the schools than you should teach birth control."

Chairman King of the Senate District Committee stated yesterday that the request of the Federation of Citizens Associations and the Public School Association for a Senate investigation of textbooks and subversive influences in the school will be taken up at the next regular meeting of the committee. He did not say when the meeting will be held.

Street Lights To Be Restored

The recent slash in electric power rates for the District Government, approved by the Public Utilities Commission, yesterday resulted in an order by the District Commissioners for restoration of all street lights which had been darkened or dimmed by insufficient appropriations.

The commissioners ordered Capt. H. C. Whitehurst to prepare the necessary orders for restoration of 1,200 street lights; and the increase of candle-power in 4,600 additional lights.

Due to the recent cut in electric light rates, the District benefited to the amount of $71,000, which is sufficient to restore all lights which have been out of service since 1934.

Since the fiscal year 1935, there has been a deficiency of $68,700 in the item which provides for street lighting. Frequent campaigns had been unable to secure restoration of the necessary funds.

Most of the lighting which will be restored is in the downtown area and on arterial highways. Traffic experts claimed that the insufficient lighting had contributed largely to traffic fatalties and accidents.

2 Drunken Boys Menace Crowd, Battle Officers

A pair of drink-crazed youths, armed with a .32 caliber automatic pistol, ran amuck on downtown E street last night, threatened employes and patrons of a restaurant, battled seven policemen and terrorized scores of early theatergoers.

Accompanied by a third man who later fled, the youths entered a restaurant near Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest. They became disorderly and the management asked them to leave.

One of the men rose from his table and struck a waiter. Another drew a gun. All three started shouting. They staggered toward the door and finally into the street. The youth with the gun dropped it as he fell through a swinging door.

Once on the street, one of the men hailed a taxi and rode away. The other two started down E street toward the National Theater. Policeman Abel Mann, on duty, saw them coming and tried to arrest them.

Then the battle started. Mann was knocked down. Both youths jumped on him. Several bystanders tried to aid. Reserves were called.

By the time additional policemen arrived, a large crowd had collected and the two "drunks" were cursing, swearing and fighting everyone within striking distance.

It was nearly 20 minutes before the youths could be dragged to a patrol wagon. Meanwhile several police cars were called to the scene.

Investigating officers said the trio of youths apparently planned a hold-up, but "got drunk first." Police are searching for the third man.

The other two were unable to give their names or addresses.

Povilas Zadelkas, Lithuanian Minister to the United States, and Mrs. Zadelkas, will attend with Mikas Bagdonas, legation secretary.

Alimony

District Courts to Enforce Other State Decrees.

District courts will enforce the decrees for alimony payments entered by courts of other jurisdiction, Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in the District Supreme Court, ruled yesterday in a suit brought by Mrs. Ida B. Battle against her former husband, John D. Battle.

The Suit was filed to compel Battle to live up to the terms of a separation agreement ratified by a Reno, Nev., court when the couple was divorced. The agreement provided, the attorneys said, that Mrs. Battle was to receive $250 a month so long as that amount in monthly payments, represented one-fourth of one-twelfth of Mr. Battle's annual salary, which was quoted as being in excess of $1,000 a month.

Dr. Sizoo Lauds District Rabbi at Program on Anniversary.

The 32 years' service of Dr. Abram Simon as rabbi of Washington Hebrew Congregation was hailed last night as proof that religious and spiritual values still have a place "in this skeptical world" by the Rev. Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo, of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Sizoo spoke at exercises commemorating the thirty-second anniversary of Dr. Simon's assumption of the rabbinate at the Hebrew Temple.

Messages of congratulation on behalf of the more than 300 members of the congregation who were present were read by Jacob Gichner, president of the Temple, and Allen de Ford and Mrs. Helen Pelzman, presidents of the Temple Brotherhood and Sisterhood.

"In coming to pay tribute to Dr. Simon tonight, we really are bearing witness to two facts," said Dr. Sizoo.

"First we bear witness to our belief in the place of spiritual values in this world. Religion is having a hard time surviving. In Russia and in Central Europe, where it is subject to the politics of those in power, religion has no future. However, it is the maxim of our faith that when a man loses faith in God he loses faith in man also.

"The second fact we bear witness to is that the fundamental function of religion is to inculcate a spirit of understanding in the world. Understanding and reconciliation—no two words are more important today.

"The example of Dr. Simon's 32 years of service in this congregation is proof of the truth of both those facts. His career has been a living example of those spiritual values which we believe in and the understanding and reconciliation which the world needs so badly."

Born in Nashville, Tenn., 64 years ago, Dr. Simon came to this city in 1904. He received his degree of doctor of philosophy at George Washington University. From 1920 to 1923 he was president of the Board of Education. He is a director and former president of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Children, former president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis and a member of the board of trustees of Hebrew Union College.

Senate Action On Leave Bills Due This Week

Randolph Predicts House Will Accept Changes Rather Than Fight.

The amended Government leave bills will be called up in the Senate on the consent calendar, it was stated yesterday, and the measures may become laws before the end of the week.

While Chairman Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee, was at home ill, Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, an influential member of the committee, predicted that the House conferees will accept the major Senate amendments rather than endanger the bills.

"I still feel that the House bills are fairer in their treatment of Government employes," he said, "but I'm afraid that if the House were to insist upon the 30-day vacation and other benefits the opponents in the Senate would prevent final passage."

Should the bills go to conference in their present form, however, some further benefits may be gained for Government workers in the customary give-and-take procedure between conferees.

While the 26-day vacation period and probably the limitation on accumulated vacation and sick leave to 60 days appear likely to be retained, Government employes are holding to the hope that the effective date of the measures may be retroactive to last July or to January 1, 1936, at least.

Under the present Senate amendments, it is pointed out, employes could not begin to accumulate the extra leave until July 1, next, and they would experience no benefits for six months or a year from then.

City's System Of Tax Sales Is Denounced

Dirksen Holds Auctions Provide Speculators With 'Weapon.'

Sub-Committee Favors Bill to Give District Property Titles.

The District's system of auctioning off property for delinquent taxes was denounced yesterday by Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, as the Judiciary sub-committee of the House District Committee considered a bill to enable the District to obtain clear title to property bid in by the tax collector.

While the sub-committee took no action, it was indicated that the bill will be reported favorably at the next full committee meeting Wednesday.

Calling attention to the practice of speculators' dealing in local real estate to the extent of millions of dollars every year, Dirksen said:

"The whole philosophy of this thing is wrong. If taxes are not paid, it is not the function of the District to take away a person's property or to give the professional tax-title buyer a weapon to use on the owners. It is a hideous damn thing.

"These professional tax-title speculators buy the cream of the property auctioned at the tax sales and leave the remainder for the District to bid in. They don't care whether the property owner is left high and dry or not. This year they picked up tax titles to between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000."

Rufus Lusk, secretary of the Washington Taxpayers' Association, agreed with Dirksen that a new plan for collecting delinquent realty taxes is needed. He asserted that the title speculators bleed the property owners for every cent possible before returning the real estate holdings.

Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman offered to aid in the drafting of a bill to change the system of tax sales if any member of Congress has a substitute plan to offer.

He urged passage of the pending bill in the meanwhile on the ground that it would provide the District with "a sizeable amount" of revenue.

S. B. Lydane, deputy tax collector, told the sub-committee that tax titles to 4,597 pieces of property were sold to speculators at the last auction. The District bid in 12,000 holdings.

Navy Planes Feed Hungry Wild Ducks

Naval airplanes from the Quantico, Va., marine base are being used to feed the starving ducks stranded on the ice-bound Potomac, the Biological Survey announced yesterday. The planes fly along the river dropping grain in 5 pound paper sacks. More than a ton of grain was distributed in this fashion yesterday and Thursday.

With the problem of feeding the starving ducks settled, the Biological Survey turned its attention to plans for conducting its annual duck census. On the basis of this census the survey ruled on the number of wild ducks that hunters will be permitted to bag during the coming season.

The census will be undertaken, as soon as the ice thaws, by an expedition of nine airplanes and the Goodyear blimp. The blimp has been included in the census-taking because of a desire by its officials to make amends for their recent shower of "manna," that frightened thousands of wild ducks from the Federal bird sanctuary, at Roaches Run.

Shelter at Bus Stop Asked For Crippled School Children

Erection of a weather-proof covering for the loading platform used by crippled children at Weightman School bus stop was urged yesterday by the Kiwanis Club in a letter to the Board of Education.

The letter, signed by Bynum Hixton, president of the club, pointed out the platform and runway leading from the buses into the school are uncovered, creating "a dangerous situation in inclement weather."

Not only do the children get wet each time it rains or snows, but the ice, snow and rain leave the wooden platform slippery, the letter said.

Ashes are strewn on the platform, but for many of the children, on rubber-tipped crutches, they prove only a minor safeguard. On poor weather days each of the 30 crippled children at the school must be carried individually from the school into the bus, a process that requires more than twice the usual time to get the children out of the building.

Classes for crippled children were established at Weightman School six years ago after a campaign by the Kiwanis Club. The runway was erected at the time to spare the children the necesity of climbing stairs. The Board of Education provides special bus transportation for the children.

The letter of Kiwanis was referred to Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou by Mrs. Marian Wade Doyle, president of the Board of Education.

8 ABC Enforcement Officers Must Patrol City, Check All Liquor Dealers on 17 Cents Per Day

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Editor's note: Washington has 1,674 licensed liquor and beer dealers. In an effort to ascertain conditions prevailing since the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, The Post has assigned a reporter to accompany enforcement officers of the ABC Board on their daily tours of inspection. This is the third in a series of stories.

Charged with the duty of supervision and control of Washington's licensed liquor dealers, enforcement officers of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board are forced to operate on approximately 17 cents a day.

These men are members of the special police investigation squad commanded by Lieut. George M. Little. There are eight officers assigned to supervise liquor licensees throughout the city. The District appropriation for this supervision is $500 a year.

This gives each officer 17 cents a day. On this, they must travel from place to place, covering their various "beats." There is no provision for transportation. Each man must furnish his own. This 17 cents must cover expenditures during investigations.

Often, members of the squad must purchase beer, wines or liquor in order to remain "undercover" agents and pose as patrons. Often, they are forced to dig down in their own pockets to make up the difference.

"We are trying to obtain at least $900 a year for these men to work on," said George Offutt, chairman of the ABC board. He smiled, and added:

"That will give each man approximately 34 cents a day."

Only two members of the squad are allowed the use of a police car for their travels. These men have been our touring companions during recent "observation" trips. They are provided with the use of an automobile because of their large territory.

During daily inspections these officers—Robert V. Murray and Winfred D. Young—must "cover" 500 licensed liquor dispensaries. They travel throughout northeast, southeast and southwest Washington.

And often the police car is unfit for use. But the investigations must continue. It is then that personal funds are brought into use.

Soon after repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the ABC board employed civilians to supervise sale and distribution of liquors and alcoholic beverages. The appropriation for these civilians was exhausted.

Representative Thomas Blanton (Democrat), Texas, suggested using policemen for the work. And the enforcement duties were transferred to Lieut. Little's squad.

"Since the police department took over supervision and enforcement of liquor regulations, violations have decreased 300 per cent," said Offutt.

It is no easy matter to curb violations and apprehend law-breaking licensees. The men who supervise are picked for their "looks." There isn't one you would take for a policeman.

And they get results.

Bridals Today Will Interest New Dealers

Miss Wheeler, Daughter of Senator, to Marry Edwin Colman.

Wickes-Shaw Nuptials to Be This Afternoon in Baltimore.

By Dudley Harmon.

Of especial interest to New Dealers around town are two weddings which take place this afternoon, one in Baltimore, and the other in Washington.

We refer to the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Wheeler, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler, to Edwin Colman, and that of Miss Henrietta Wickes, daughter of Joseph Lee Wickes, of Baltimore, to David Collins Shaw.

At one time, all four worked for the New Deal, although Shaw is the only one still with an alphabetical agency. Colman was an economist with the AAA for some months.

Miss Wickes started with the NRA and then she was changed to the position of librarian with the Rural Resettlement Administration, and this winter has been guardian over files and books in the Walsh mansion on Massachusetts avenue.

Harvard Law Graduate.

Shaw, who graduated from Harvard Law School recently, first came to Washington as an attorney for the old Labor Board, which functioned under the wing of the Department of Labor. Last summer when the Wagner bill which created the new labor board was under fire in Congress, he wondered what his fate was going to be as a member of one of the numerous New Deal agencies whose future was still undecided.

However, when the Wagner bill did become law, and the new National Labor Relations Board was set up, Shaw took himself off to St. Louis, where he is engaged in regional work as a lawyer. He and his bride will live in St. Louis.

Miss Wheeler has, for several years, been identified with public service. She takes an active interest in politics and was one of the founders of the Young Democrats Club in Washington. At one time, she was vice president of the National organization. In her spare time, Miss Wheeler did some lobbying for the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

Miss Wheeler has an A. B. and M. A. degree from George Washington University. Until this week, she wrote publicity for the Federal Housing Administration.

"However, I've resigned from the FHA, and have no immediate plans to start working again," she said.

Miss Wickes' wedding this afternoon will be small, but among the guests will be several from the New Deal contingent. I. N. Stokes, young lawyer with the Securities and Exchange Commission, about whom an article recently appeared in a well-known magazine, will attend with his sister, Miss Olivia Stokes, a classmate of Miss Wickes' at Bryn Mawr.

The RFC will be represented by Alec Hawes, a lawyer with that organization. Several of the bridegroom's colleagues from the National Labor Relations Board will also be present, among them Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Smith and Malcolm Ross, director of publicity for the N. L. R. B.

Luncheon Honors Couple.

Yesterday, Stokes and his sister gave a luncheon in honor of the couple, and on Thursday evening Ross entertained a small group of their friends in his home in Alexandria.

By a peculiar co-incidence, both Miss Wickes and Shaw were tenants at different times of the house at 3112 Q street. This house, similar to the "little red house in Georgetown," was first let to Miss Wickes and three of her friends, and then to Shaw and three of his.

During their tenancy the little brick house was the scene of many a heated political discussion. It also has a romantic history as well, for all three of the feminine former tenants are married.

Assisting Mrs. William Keohan, chairman of hospitality, will be Mrs. Frank Mondell, Miss M. Louisa Adams Clement and Miss Daisy Prentice.

A musical program will be presented under the direction of Mrs. George Oliver Gillingham, chairman of music.

WAS IT MURDER?

By James Hilton

Author of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" and "Lost Horizon."

CHAPTER XXX.

"ACCIDENTAL? Robert Marshall's death accidental?" asked Revell.

"Yes. Mrs. Ellington says it was, and I always rather thought so myself. There was never any definite evidence to the contrary, and the murder theory was very far-fetched. Incidentally, I found after careful inquiry amongst some of the boys that there had been horseplay in the dormitory—swinging on the gas brackets and so on, though, of course, after the boy's death they were all terrified about admitting it."

Guthrie went on, leaning forward a little: "We come now to Lambourne. I needn't say much about him except that he must have the credit or discredit of laying the spark to the train of gunpowder. Lambourne, in the course of conversation with Mrs. Ellington shortly after the accident, remarked upon the cleverness of such a method of committing murder. He treated her, indeed, to a complete lecture on murder as a fine art. And thus the great idea was born in her mind.

"It certainly was great, from her standpoint. She wanted three things—first, to be rid of her husband; second, to have money, and third, to marry Roseveare. Lambourne, as I said, put murder into her mind, but the elaboration of the idea was wholly hers. And, briefly, it was as follows: She would kill the second brother in such a way that suspicion would inevitably fall on her husband. But first of all, before doing that, she had another little scheme in hand. About a week after the accident she went to Roseveare and pretended—she was a superb actress, remember—to be upset and hysterical. When Roseveare asked her what was the matter, she began to talk wildly and hysterically about the accident and her husband's connection with it. Roseveare naturally pooh-poohed the matter, which, of course, she had expected. She knew that as things stood then the idea was absurd, but she also knew that if the second brother died by another apparent accident those wild hints of hers about her husband's connection with the first affair would recur to Roseveare with terrible significance.

Feminine Frailty.

"Here, however, we come to the first example of the lady's weak spot—and that was a tendency to have moments of sheer panic. Roseveare, it seems, had after all been slightly impressed by her hysterical suspicions (she must have acted too well), and had sent for you to look into the matter unofficially. Mrs. Ellington for some reason had one of her panicky moments when Lambourne told her that someone was already on the track—so she immediately went to Roseveare and told him that she'd been a very naughty and hysterical woman to think such horrid things about her husband; that she hadn't really meant any of them, and that she was very, very sorry! Roseveare believed her only too willingly and dismissed his young inquiry agent at the earliest possible moment. Extraordinary, really, that she should have worried about you at all, Revell! What had she to fear? Nothing; yet for all that your arrival upset her nerve for the time being. I should think you ought to feel rather proud of that."

Revell made no comment and Guthrie proceeded: "Fell; now we pass to the actual murder, and I expect you're thinking it's about time we did, Mrs. Ellington, after you had gone back, soon regained her lost courage and began to plan the murder by accident.' She must have made her detailed plans very quickly and almost at the last minute. She knew that Wilbraham was a swimmer and very often went to the baths on the warm evenings. On the particular day decided upon she contrived, by an apparently casual suggestion to her husband, to have the bath suddenly emptied. Then, soon after 10 in the evening, when the boy came down to the baths all ready for a swim, she met him, seemingly by accident, and entered with him on some pretext or other. It wasn't more than half dark and when they got into the main building a surprise awaited them—the bath was empty.

"Mrs. Ellington wanted the boy's head to be bashed in completely and she came to the really brilliant conclusion that the best way to achieve this would be to make him actually fall from that top diving platform. She did it by larking about with him for a time and then challenging him for a race up to the top. There are two ladders, you know, approaching the platform from either side, so conditions were quite good for a race. The two reached the top, and there, in the gathering twilight she whipped out her revolver and shot him so that he fell head foremost on to the tiled floor 60 feet below. There was no need to bash his head in.

Lambourne Found Body.

"Now," he continued, after a short pause, "we can turn to what happened immediately after the murder. Mrs. Ellington, of course, went home and to bed. And here comes another factor in the situation. Ellington was a very jealous man and suspected his wife with Lambourne. That night—the night of the murder, that is—he fancied she had been to visit him. He didn't tax her with it—that wasn't his way—but he brooded and went out to walk his feelings off a little. Meanwhile Lambourne, thinking to have a swim, had gone down to the baths and had found the body there. I don't doubt that it was a fearful shock to him and that he really did do exactly what he said he did. He suspected murder instantly, but whereas other men would have raised an alarm and declared their suspicions, Lambourne's less straightforward brain accepted the challenge, as it were, and set about to trump the other fellow's card. Believing that Ellington had bashed the boy's head in and taken away the weapon, he fabricated, just as he confessed, the evidence of the cricket bat. Then he took his stroll and met Ellington. It must have been a dashed queer meeting—Lambourne thinking Ellington had just committed murder, and Ellington thinking Lambourne had just been carrying on with his wife . . ."

He smiled slightly and continued: "I think you know how I came into it all. Somebody sent Col. Graham, the boy's guardian, an anonymous letter which he brought to us along with newspaper cuttings of the two inquests. You see, then, my difficulty when I arrived at Oakington. I had nothing at all to go on, but the coincidence of the two apparent accidents and an anonymous letter that might or might not be some malicious hoax. Then just in the nick of time came the finding of the cricket bat.

Rumors Developed.

"By then, as you know, there were all sorts of rumors about the place and it was pretty generally known that Scotland Yard was on the job. Two of my men, plainclothes chaps, of course, found the bat during a casual stroll about the grounds. They weren't looking for anything—they just tumbled across it. It struck me at the time that the thing must have been very badly hidden, and why, after all, should it have been hidden at all and not destroyed? Still it was evidence, and it enabled us to get a home-office order for the exhumation of the body, and that, of course, led to the discovery of something that was a complete surprise to us—the bullet in the boy's brain.

"I did not suspect her at first. On the contrary, there was a fairly strong case against Ellington himself. For days, as a matter of fact, I felt like arresting Ellington—on suspicion, at any rate. And yet, in a way, I never felt any enthusiasm about it—subconsciously, even then, I must have known he wasn't guilty."

Guthrie smiled. "We detectives deal in evidence, of course, not in subconscious intuitions. Anyhow, before long, the case against Ellington was decidedly weakened by the house butler's statement that on the fatal night he had seen Lambourne walking toward the ring with a cricket bat. I had already, in a way, been rather favorably impressed by Ellington. So you see, my suspicions veered a little toward Lambourne. It wasn't easy to think of a motive in his case, but then he was such a queer person that he might well have had a queer enough reason. I did, I admit, think for a time that he might have killed the boy to throw suspicion on Ellington. And it was then that Mrs. Ellington got into her second panic."

Collar, Belt Sets Relieve Winter Frock

Add Gay Touch While Milady Is Awaiting Spring's Return.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

WHY NOT take a winter weary frock and spike it with a bright new collar and belt set? While the calendar warns us spring is round the corner, the weather man says the corner is miles away. So, we'll hold on to our spring finery till the balmy breezes bring us confidence. But we'll relieve the monotony of our wardrobe with gay touches here and there. Surely nothing hits the spot so well as a chic collar and matching belt. And surely few can compare with those now shown in a downtown store. They're made of patent leather (nothing smarter!) and come in colors galore.

The collars are definitely Peter Pannish, all of them. With the belts there's a variety. Some are narrow, some wide.

The prices are just right.

Dual Personality Lamp.

IT TAKES a strong will to resist the dual personality lamp shown in a Connecticut avenue shop. In the first place it's one of those gorgeously plain ones that look good in any setting. Secondly, it serves both as a reading or bridge lamp, and then when the shade is turned, it's a neat little reflector casting the light ceilingward and giving a soft illumination to the room.

The long chromium stem is so arranged that it can be raised or lowered as you please.

Something In Purses.

PURSES there are galore, but few and far between are those as fascinating as the one displayed now in an F street shop.

Outside it's a pin grain leather. The lining is lizard skin, and so is the little change purse fastened securely with a small gold chain. A zipper opening in the side gives access to it conveniently placed pocket for car pass, bank book or billets doux.

The purse is available in brown, black, navy, gray, red and green.

THERE ARE people who feel that unless they pay a lot for a thing it isn't any good. There are those who prefer to pay high prices for things they use often and economize on others. It is this latter group who should be interested in the umbrellas selling for such a conservative sum in a local store. They're an excellent quality, and extremely attractive. There are two types, the glorias and the oil skins.

It's the oil skins that usually appeal to Miss Collegiate. They come in gay colors and have a sort of verve and flare. The price, $1.95.

Colossal Soap Cakes.

SOAP has a way of giving out just at the wrong time. That's why the colossal cakes are such boons. They're practically big as footballs (a slight exaggeration), and they'll last and last.

The soap is made by a concern famous for the quality of its products so you can depend on it to be mild and unabusive to even the tenderest of skins.

There's a choice of several fragrances.

Pleasant Homes

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE LADY next door is doing over her bedroom and she is eager to make it pretty and not make mistakes in selections. She is undecided between a set of walnut furniture of French design and another of colonial mahogany. Which would we advise, she asks. And what about the rug and the wall color? What kind of draperies, bedspread and dressing table skirt? She doesn't want a pink and blue effect, as she is tired of those colors.

Either the French walnut or the colonial mahogany would be very nice indeed and both would have enduring beauty. Therefore, we should say that the choice here would depend entirely on her own personal preference. She admitted that she really preferred the mahogany. So we suggested that she select flowered scatter rugs for the floor—there are very pretty ones that would be charming with mahogany. And green and ivory might be a lovely color theme for this room . . . with accents in coral. She could have the walls done in ivory, then get chintz with an ivory ground and bouquet design in flower colors and lots of green foliage. This for the spread, draperies and dressing table skirt, finished off with pleated ruffles of green. The rug could have keynotes of green and the accessories could have details of coral. A slipper chair in plain green with coral welting, or a green chaise lounge with a coral throw would finish off the room delightfully.

Sees Feminine Rule in America

Too Sure of Rights to Be Happy in Marriage With European Man, Declares Writer; Regrets Not Coming Here to Live Twenty Years Ago.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"IF I WERE A EUROPEAN man, I would never, never marry an American woman. She is too independent, too much concerned with her own success, too sure of her rights, to be happy with any man rooted in European tradition.

"But since I am a woman, I regret I did not come to America to live—20 years ago. I would have had opportunities the average woman never dreams of in Europe."

Thus, dynamic Odette Keun, French writer, summed up her opinion of American women and their chances in a changing world. With more than a dozen books to her credit, including the much-discussed "I Discover the English," Mme. Keun has come to spend a year in this country, gathering material for another book.

On First Visit.

Three and a half months ago she arrived in New York, on her first visit to this country. "I realize my observations are superficial, that they may change as I stay here longer," she said. "But you ask for impressions, and I am willing to give them."

With this as an introduction, she lighted another cigarette, settled back comfortably in her chair, and proceeded to elaborate on American men and women—their virtues and vices.

She is convinced "America is the greatest 'matriarchy' of the modern world. Men here give their women a chance to get ahead in business, and in the professions. They even realize some women have ability equal to their own; that in social relations they are often superior.

"Why every time I came across a man in Europe, I went down in defeat. Here, I get a kind of vicarious satisfaction in watching women get the better of men."

She stressed further that the American woman is much more aggressive than her European sister, has less spiritual subjection, and more pride in her own accomplishments. "It seems to me her ambition for personal success is the keynote of her life; that she is constantly striving to get something for nothing; that she never abdicates under any pressure. For these reasons she is, what you call 'hard.'

Zest for Life.

In a more complimentary vein, Mme. Keun spoke of "the American woman's optimism, her zest for life, and her ability to make the best of her physical attributes. The typical women in this country, as I have seen her, is well-groomed, often beautiful, and as smartly dressed as her purse will allow," she continued. "From what contact I have had with her, I have found her extremely gracious, generous and hospitable. I like her—very much. I envy her, her chance in life; I deplore the fact she allows her ambition to make her hard."

Mme. Keun made it clear however, she does not intend to spend her time looking for flaws in the people and customs of America. She regretted the attitude of "Countless European men and women who come over here, live like sponges on Americans, and then back criticizing everything—even American hospitality."

Discussing further discoveries she has made here, Mme. Keun spoke of "the great American myth." She said the United States had been publicized as a country of great opportunity, wealth and democracy. "You have put that across on us," she averred. "We in Europe have been completely sold on the idea. Now I know your country has much less opportunity than we thought; that the masses have always been poor, and for one man who emerged wealthy, thousands have stayed engulfed in poverty. Yet the spotlight has been on your rich men. To us, across the Atlantic, he has stood as the symbol of America.

Another Great War.

Mme. Keun believes that within four or five years "or as soon as Hitler gets ready for it," there will be another great war. "It will destroy Europe," she said. "The mantle of Western civilization will then fall on America. I wonder what the result will be? I feel this country is too big, too unwieldy, to be governed properly. Progress here has not been even in pace. In many respects you are ahead of us; in others—social legislation, for example—you are as backward as the Balkans."

She spoke of the President as "a broker of ideas." She compared him to the typical English Liberal—"a rich, leisured gentleman, suddenly forced to make experiments affecting every class in the country. He has faced the situation," she said, "with admirable courage."

In this connection she also emphasized, "When I hear someone over here call him a socialist or a communist, I feel I should give that person a lesson in the meaning of words. The very idea he is either is preposterous."

Supreme Court Expert to Study High Tribunals of Other Lands

University Women Award Research Fellowship to Mrs. Hankin.

MANY Washington housewives who formerly spent their Monday mornings marketing or making out menus now join the queue that waits for admission to a session of the Supreme Court the first morning of each week.

Now, as never before, women everywhere are turning their attention to decisions made by "the nine old men." But for the past decade one Washington woman, Charlotte A. Hankin, has made a detailed study of every case before the Supreme Court and every decision rendered by that body.

Collaborating with her husband in the Legal Research Service, which furnishes analyses and classifications of cases docketed and opinions handed down by the court, she is the only woman in America engaged in work of this type.

Research Fellowship.

Now, she will have the opportunity to study the highest courts in other countries. According to a recent announcement from the American Association of University Women, she has just been awarded the National Crusade Fellowship offered by that organization.

Yesterday in her office in the Woodward Building, Mrs. Hankin told something of her plans regarding the fellowship. "I propose to make a study of the power of the judicial review of the United States as compared with the highest courts of other democractic countries," she said. "My purpose in this is to determine to what extent the exercise of judicial power over legislation tends to stabilize existing institutions, and to what extent—if at all—it stands in the way of progress."

She further explained she plans to go abroad in August to attend the meeting of the International Federation of University Women in Poland and will go from there to France, Czecho-Slovakia, Spain, Great Britian and Ireland to make a study of the highest courts in those countries.

As a result of what I shall observe and what my husband and I know about the highest courts here, we shall collaborate on a book on New Deal problems as interpreted by the U. S. Supreme Court."

Mrs. Hankin is one of the four American women to receive research fellowships from the American Association of University Women.

Bad Digestion Of Starches Held Serious

Marked Stunting of Growth in Children Is Possible If Uncorrected.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

WHEN we use the word "digested" we refer to the changes that must take place in food before it is ready for absorption by the blood and the lymph—that is, before it can nourish the body. Starches are digested when they are converted into glucose; proteins when they are broken down into relatively simple compounds called amino acids. In like manner fats must pass through nature's chemical laboratory before they can be absorbed. If a single step in the process fails, fat may pass through the intestine unabsorbed—fermented, perhaps, but not digested. There are many links in the chain, and one break can spoil the product.

Children sometimes show symptoms of failure to digest and hence absorb fat. There are probably many grades of this deficiency, but when the function appears to be wholly lacking the condition is known as celiac, or Gee-Herter disease. Samuel Jones Gee, who described this particular state of affairs in 1888, observed that it was often mistaken for tuberculosis, and C. A. Herter called it intestinal infantilism because the affected children were stunted in growth.

Abdomen Enlarged.

The most characteristic symptom is great enlargement of the abdomen, which is in sharp contrast with the wasting of the balance of the child's body. In spite of all that can be done in the way of forcing ordinary food, there is an obstinate failure to gain in weight, and in consequence the general physical development is retarded. Mentally these children are precocious. They understand everything that is going on about them and take great interest in their surroundings, but the use of words and the formation of sentences is delayed. During the severe phases of the illness there is marked anemia.

While the disease may appear at the age of six months it is more often observed about the end of the first year of life. The disease generally disappears about the fifth year, although some physicians believe that it may recur in adult life in the disorder known as steatorrhea.

Avoid Fats.

In a typical case of celiac disease, a child one year old weighed 12 pounds. A year later the weight was exactly the same. The abdomen appeared to increase in size during this interval and tissue starvation was progressive. There was also considerable wrinkling of the skin. Rickets frequently complicates the picture, with imperfect development of the bony skeleton.

Treatment consists largely in proper dietetic management. Fats should be excluded from the diet as far as possible inasmuch as it is perfectly evident that the child cannot digest this type of food. Furthermore, it appears that fat is being excreted in excess of the amount in the diet. This is probably not the case. Both fats and starches should be reduced and the diet made up chiefly of protein with generous quantities of vitamins. At the outset the disease may be aggravated unwittingly by parents who insist that the child take large quantities of cod liver oil, milk, eggs, and butter.

No attempt can be made here to outline a diet since it must be adjusted with care to each individual case. The results of treatment are reasonably satisfactory if proper nutritional management is consistently maintained.

Most Children See Imaginary Mates at Play

Parents Should Not Be Alarmed Over Unseen Companions.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

BOOKS have been written and lectures given on the imaginary playmates which children have. Parents faced with the problem are apt to think their child in some way out of the ordinary, either above or below normal. Actually, though, a large number of children have such unseen companions at some time in their lives and are neither liars nor yet budding geniuses. They are simply passing through a normal phase of childhood, and the less attention paid to it the better.

To them, these playmates of whom they talk are quite as real as the friends mentioned by mother whom the child has never seen. Aunt Susan, who lives at a distance and so is a stranger to Tommy is certainly as mythical in his eyes as his playmate, Samson, is to his mother. Furthermore, Tommy, who is only 3, has no real playmates and so makes them up to join in his games. As soon as he plays with other children he probably will forget Samson.

If the invisible companion becomes troublesome, putting Tommy up to mischief, or, according to Tommy, does naughty things himself, it is a good idea to treat the occurrence in a matter of fact way. Tell Tommy that if his friend misbehaves he will have to stop coming to the house. Tommy probably believes strongly enough in the friend's existence to take the threat seriously. If the offense is repeated, let him take the punishment.

Of course there is a limit even to imaginary playmates. If they continue after the child is 6 or 7, it is time to inquire what is lacking in the child's contacts which makes these imaginary companions necessary. He may be lonely or unhappy, need more or wider contacts, or be compensating for a sense of neglect.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Engaged to Marry Georgian of Limited Education, Girl Is Asked to Go as Bride to Live on His Family's Bounty; She Questions Wisdom of Move.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have been for some time a follower of your column and have great faith in your wisdom. Therefore, I humbly submit my problem, hoping you will see fit to give me an answer.

I have been keeping company with a young man ten years my senior for quite a while. When I first met him he had a Government position, but it was only temporary, and he has since been forced to leave Washington and return to his home in a small country village in Georgia. At the present time he is living with his family and has only a part-time job. Because he has had only a grade school education, I fully believe he will do better to stay there and work, rather than try for a "white collar job" in the city. He refuses to do this unless I will marry him and be content to live there.

Now, I love Washington because my friends and my family are here and as I have only been working a short while, I am still young enough to enjoy my freedom and independence from household work, of which I have had a great deal more than my share. I have told him several times that if we could live here and make both ends meet I would consider marriage, but as he is now partially dependent on his family and does not have anything saved for the future, I feel that a wife would be a burden rather than a helpmate to him.

* * * *

I would not mind the struggle here, surrounded by friends and family who would see me through in time of need, but do not feel that I would want to be dependent on his family.

I do not want to give him up, for he has the endearing qualities of faithfulness, tenderness and truthfulness. Several friends have said that if I really loved him I would be willing to take the chance of making a successful marriage on little money. Perhaps they are right, but I have lived in a family where money was always a vital question. There never seemed to be quite enough.

My mother had a nervous breakdown when my younger brother was 2 years old and all the household responsibility was shifted to my shoulders. Eventually my parents were divorced and my brother and I lived with my mother. This put even more responsibility on me, and it was not until I was 19 that I finally managed to graduate from high school.

* * * *

So, you see, I am well fitted to make a good housewife, but should I give up this financial independence, which I have had only a year, and try to build a home on such a flimsy foundation? Would it be asking too much to ask him to wait until we have saved something on which to start? He has known the meaning of hard work and has been "on his own" since he was 19, too, so he should know how I feel. The fact that he has waited all these years for the right girl shouldn't make waiting a little longer so very difficult, do you think?

Thanking you, I am, very sincerely, UNDECIDED.

Love Not Enough for Happy Marriage.

DEAR UNDECIDED: In believing marriage should wait upon some reasonable guarantee of self-sustaining income, you are showing commendable wisdom. Love is not sufficient foundation on which to build this most important partnership in life. Love may be likened to a beautiful flower which, if it is to bloom perennially, must have its roots in the substantial soil of economic security. Otherwise, it will sooner or later wither and die, choked to death for lack of proper nutrition.

* * * *

You would be making the mistake of a lifetime in going to Georgia at the present time, under existing circumstances, to marry this man who proposes to make you a bride at his family's expense. No matter how loyal and devoted his family may be to him as brother and son, this sense of blood responsibility will balk at the laborious actuality of having to support an able-bodied stranger. Everything you did and everything you didn't do, once the novelty and excitement of the initial welcome had worn off, would come in for a fulsome share of biting criticism. You have known too little happiness, too much economic insecurity, too unseemly responsibility in the past, to be in a position to waste your young substance in a second and longer journey along the same jagged and perilous path.

* * * *

Don't ask anything of your fiance and don't attempt to force any solution of the problem on him. Tell him you love him devotedly; too much, in fact, to embark on a course of action which means slow strangulation of that love. Tell him you are too self-respecting and have too much respect for him to wish to place either of you in the position of being beggars living together on the bounty of others. Tell him marriage must wait the day when marriage is decently possible, if that day ever comes.

Real Man Eschews Half Measures.

DON'T URGE HIS RETURN to Washington. Neither advise him to remain in Georgia. Men who are men, not just males of the species, are capable of making, and rightly should make, decisions pertaining to where they shall live and work, and such decisions must be made without undue pressure from their womenfolk if best results are to obtain. A man incapable of making such important decisions for himself; one who will yield his innermost convictions to another in such matters, is a dubious pillar of strength for wife and children to lean on.

* * * *

Moreover, when a woman leaves a worth-while man entirely free to make decisions affecting their mutual happiness, he is very apt to make her happiness his first consideration. When he truly loves her, his love may become a source of strength which enables him to accomplish things which would have been impossible without that inspiration. But he must be left very largely to his own devices to work things out for the best.

* * * *

Maintain your integrity of thought and action. Reserve the right in these crucial early years to determine the direction your life shall take, and let your fiance test his maturity and fitness for married responsibility by wrestling with the problem of how to make your two paths converge in tolerably happy marriage. If he can't find the answer before marriage, he probably never will afterward. M. H.

New Beach Bonnets a Riot of Color

MIAMI, Fla. (AP).—A hat in the sun is worth two in the shade, judging from size of the models being worn here by smart resorters.

Hats for sunshine hours are twice as large as last season's models and thrice as spectacular.

Crowns are conspicuously absent in almost every model, be it made of leghorn, antelope, starched linen or batiste. Those few in evidence are reduced to absurd remnants of crowns, and everything possible is done to make them look as little like crowns as possible.

One chic ensemble is a glorified jockey's cap in sulphur antelope, with wide-cuffed gauntlets and a huge matching bag.

Styles also reach into the past and snatch at old-fashioned frivolities such as the snood, which great-grandmother wore. Those seen here are on the half-a-hat order, with the front part in white panama.

U. S. Takes First and Third After Two 2-Man Sled Heats

First Crown In Games Is Visioned

By Gayle Talbot,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, Germany, Feb. 14.—Whirling down the 1,600-meter chute at a record-breaking tempo, United States bobsledders swept into first and third places today, at the halfway stage of the Olympic two-man championship, thereby reviving hopes for America's first conquest of the 1936 winter games.

Leading the field of 23 teams after the first two heats of the four-heat competition was the husky Keene Valley (N. Y.) combination of Ivan Brown, driver, and Alan Washbond. They put together two record-cracking runs to gain an apparently decisive margin of more than three seconds over the Swiss sled driven by Fritz Feierabend.

Colgate Quits Sickbed.

The pilot of the second American team, Gilbert Colgate, jr., of New York, arose from a sickbed to register another spectacular set of performances, with Dick Lawrence, of Branchville, N. J., as his companion. They likewise bettered the former course record twice and were in third place, trailing the Swiss stars by only 35-100ths of a second.

Tonight the Americans, who did no better than fourth and sixth in the four-man bobs, were conceded an excellent chance of finishing one-two for the title which J. Hubert Stevens and his brother, Curtis, won at Lake Placid four years ago. The final two heats will be run tomorrow.

Never in bob sledding history has a course taken such a beating as the Olympic chute suffered today. The record Reto Capadrutt, of Switzerland had set at 1 minute 25.20 seconds was beaten 12 times and equalled once. Surprisingly enough, there was not a single spill.

Although the new record of 1:20.31 was held by Feierabend when the day's firing was over, the Swiss could not match the consistently fast pace Brown set in both his heats. The daring American pilot was clocked in 1:22.50 for his first heat and then dashed down the 1,600 meter run in 1:21.02 for total elapsed time of 2:43.52.

Slow Time in First Heat.

Feierabend's record time, on the other hand, followed a comparatively slow 1:26.34 performance in the first heat, for a total time of 2:4.65. Colgate was clocked in 1:25.06 and 1:21.94 for total time of 2:47.00.

Fourth place in the standings went to Capadrutt, who was runner-up to his compatriot, Pierre Musy, in the four-man championship.

Despite their lead, Brown and Washbond appeared tonight to be pondering the question: "What's three seconds among a bunch of maniacs?"

They considered their margin trifling, but compatriots disagreed.

"If you try to set another record tomorrow morning," said Edward Varno, of Lake Placid, to Brown, "I'll break your neck. Just take it easy and win with what you've got in hand."

"You might as well start breaking then," said Brown. "We're going to take nothing easy. If that run is lie it was today and the sled doesn't jump the wall, just watch our smoke."

Paul Dean Hits Terms; May Quit Game

Temporarily Cancels Plans to Leave at Once for Training Camp.

By the Associated Press.

DALLAS, Feb. 14.—Paul (Daffy) Dean—St. Louis Cardinal pitcher, farmer and golfer—strongly hinted at quitting baseball today unless the Cardinal management fattens his 1936 contract.

He exploded after sending the proffered contract, unsigned, back to President Sam Breadon by return mail.

"I believe I'm worth a whole lot more to the Cards than I was last season. I sent my contract back and will sit right here in Dallas until I get what I want.

"From the looks of things, I Wouldn't be a bit surprised if I'm not a real holdout before long."

May Be Unanimous.

Paul said he had not heard from Brother "Dizzy," but he was certain "Diz" would make it "unanimous." Paul ventured the prediction that "they might as well close the ball park gates if 'Diz' doesn't stay in St. Louis."

Modesty prevented him from saying what would result if both shed the Red Bird uniform.

Paul temporarily canceled plans to leave Sunday or Monday for the spring training camp at Bradenton, Fla., saying, "I'm not going to spring training until I get what I want." He declined to reveal the contract terms.

Late Last Year.

He recalled that he didn't sign last year until after reaching the camp.

If he can not reach an agreement, Paul said:

"I'll just start playing golf and do a little farming in the summer time. Sometimes I think I'd rather be on a golf course anyway."

Venzke Races Cunningham Tonight

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—Renewal of the battle for mile running honors, with Glenn Cunningham in the unfamiliar role of challenger to Pennsylvania's Gene Venzke, features the all-star program of the New York A. C. track meet in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night.

Competition between them was heightened two weeks ago when Venzke led Cunningham across the finish line behind a bristling 4:11 mile turned in by Cornell's Joe Mangan. Last week at Boston Venzke, flashing from reminiscent of his 1932 record-breaking indoor campaign, defeated Mangan. An attack of grippe will keep Mangan out of tomorrow's race.

Ripe for Revenge.

Out of competition since the Wanamaker mile of two weeks ago, Cunningham is ripe for revenge and seeks outright possession of the Baxter Trophy. He won the event in 1933 and last year, when he turned in a record-making 4:09.8 performance. That beat Venzke's 1932 mark of 4:10.

There will be three other starters. Harry Williamson, of North Carolina, the Southern Conference mile and half-mile champion who won the Millrose 1,000 in 2:13.6; Glen Dawson, of Tulsa, the national 1,000-meter champion, and Lou Burns, Manhattan College sophomore.

This Morning . . .

Without Shirley Povich.

By George Clark.

NOBODY loves me—I'm a copy reader. I am hated by all my compatriots of the sports department whose copy I enjoy slashing, whose pet phrases I like to delete and whose punch lines I never find punchy.

CLARK.

All these fellows—from Shirley Povich, the sports editor, all the way down to the veriest handout, space-seeking publicity man—probably would like nothing better than to send me along with Admiral Byrd's next expedition to Little America. They'd probably arrange with the Admiral to see that I got frozen stiff under a big hunk of Antarctic ice. But I've got 'em, the connivers, they can't do without me or my kind. Headlines won't write themselves, you know.

Truly, I'm the forgotten man of the sports department, and I feel hurt about it, too. When Mr. Povich got ready to jump into his new car with his missus and their little Povich, he took one last look around the office and sickly sighed a "Good-by, you mugs, don't let my column go to seed." Then he gave instructions as to who would write it—Dulaney first, Haight second, McCormick third, etc., etc. With a final glance he turned my way and with a shrug, shunted out of the office as if to say to me, "You can't write, you're a copy reader." Well, I'll admit it. I may not be able to write, but, boy, can I whittle down what other folks write!

Three years at the business in this particular department have added some knowledge, I hope, and much grief, I know—lost teeth (probably from gnashing them over Mr. Povich's own tale of how the Nats would surely win the pennant by 1948); lost hair (from scratching a weary head to find suitable synonyms for "Nats Win" or "Nats Lose" as the case may be).

Withal, however, there have been some bright spots, and about each one of my writing cohorts I'll remember something in the long winters of grandfatherhood.

F'r instance, Povich once wrote a trick lead that I think was one of the best ever written by man or beast. Goodness only knows, at that particular time, Shirley (I'm getting more familiar) was just about out of ideas, or should have been. The strain of covering 154 baseball games in one season is no lark, and copy-reading stories on said 154 games is no fun, either.

At any rate, the 1933 World Series bobbed up and who but the Nats were battling it out for the championship with the New York Giants. The last and deciding game, if you remember, was won by a home run, punched out by the Giants' Mel Ott in the tenth inning. The story, in the estimation of some, might have called for an opening paragraph of some 200 words, including "stamina," "fate," "crashing willows," or "indomitable," or such.

But none of these for Friend Povich. He was feeling pretty low at the time, so he started off with 'N' OTT'S SO GOOD. That was one phrase that gave both sides of the picture, the New York and the Washington angles, all in one.

Then there's Walter Haight's story written en route to the $100,000 race in California last year. Walter had never been in an airplane before and was certainly apprehensive, not to say downright scared. He wrote about how dizzy he felt climbing up the steps of the plane; as dizzy as he had felt years ago when his wife forced him to paint the kitchen ceiling from atop a stepladder. I felt a little dizzy, too, reading it. He described how the "cities of the Nation are flying under me faster than teacher's pet used to rattle off the names of the State capitals when I was in school." And his date line of "Higher-Than-a-Kite, Mo., Feb. 17" was one of the cleverest I have ever encountered. The Post received hundreds of telephone calls and letters praising the story.

Johnny Vosburgh's dispatches while on his way to Morgantown for a George Washington-West Virginia football game made history among the select few of The Post sports department. It seems that Johnny and other scribes arrived at the scene of battle and found, to their chagrin, that the George Washington squad, in another car, had met with a semi-disaster en route. Johnny filed a story of the loss. A searching party was sent out and Johnny filed another story. The team then arrived and another story bit the dust. To cap it all, the searching party finally returned to find their intended prey already in camp. Johnny sent in a final account of how the Colonials probably would lose the morrow's game after their harrowing experience. Whereupon, we back home sat down to try and figure out if Johnny were a victim in some kind of conspiracy—publicity conspiracy.

Three other stories stand out in my mind, if any—Bill McCormick's interview with Jim Londos detailing how the then-champion wrestler was an intellectual of the first-degree; Dave Herman's series on the National Amateur golf championship at Brookline; Tony Aichison's story about Georgetown's gallant fight in handing New York U.'s basketball team its first defeat in some 20 games.

I'll always get a laugh over recalling how George Considine used to write all the pre-wrestling match stories. For six months, night after night, he'd sit down and pound out some clever tale of the coming week's rasslefest—and during all that time he never saw a match.

Mr. Ben Bane Delaney has not been very prolific, as regards writing, since he came to The Post about a year ago. But I do know that he attended the University of Virginia and that during the boxing season his weekly expression is, "Hurray, we won," and during the football season he persists in mumbling something about a "moral victory." Did I say not very prolific. Well, maybe I'd better stop this quibbling—'cause even if he isn't a prolific writer he can slash copy, just as I can, and he probably will ere this reaches print. Then I'll hate somebody.

Martin Is Firm, Spurns Cardinals' Third Offer

Oklahoma City, Feb. 14 (AP).—John Leonard "Pepper" Martin, St. Louis Cardinal baseball star, said today he planned to return his 1936 contract unsigned for the third time.

Although the terms of his contract have not been announced, it is understood Martin is asking for an increase of from $1,000 to $4,000 a year.

Colonial Rally Tops Elkins, 70 to 52

Goldfaden's 20 Points in Last Half Give G. W. 12th Straight.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ELKINS, W. Va., Feb. 14.—Overcoming a first half enemy lead and the handicaps of a small floor with officiating to which they were unaccustomed, George Washington University's basketeers opened their West Virginia invasion here tonight with a 70-to-52 victory over Davis and Elkins, their twelfth in a row, and thirteenth in 14 games.

Davis and Elkins enjoyed a 30-to-27 lead at intermission as the result of sensational goal shooting by Ed Guttowski and Shorty Miers, while a G. W. team, confused by frequent penalties for "walking" and close guarding—decisions far different from those called by Washington officials—tried vainly to pull itself together.

Goldfaden Goes Wild.

However, the Colonials refused to be daunted in the second half and conquered their foes by the simple expedient of outshooting them as big Ben Goldfaden broke loose for six field goals and four foul tosses.

Altogether the lanky Jersey junior, though playing only the last 30 minutes of the game, rang up 20 points and completely shoot off the scoring lethargy that has marked his recent performances.

It was the largest team total George Washington has registered in several years and the largest score ever made by an opponent of Davis and Elkins on the local floor. Tommy O'Brien contributed 13 points to keep the Colonial scoring lead with a total of 147 points while Hal Kiesel, brilliant center, poured in 15 to run his total to 138.

Capt. Tuffy Leemans and George Freilicher were ejected on personal fouls in the first ten minutes of the game, and only the long-range shooting and flashy ball handling of Midget Milton Schonfeld, diminutive guard, saved G. W. from a worse fate prior to intermission.

The Colonials will seek victory No. 13 tomorrow night when they tackle West Virginia at Morgantown.

Lightweight Ring Tourney Hits Snag

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 14.—The New York State athletic commission has refused to recognize Madison Square Garden's lightweight elimination tournament as such unless Wesley Ramey, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Pedro Montanez, the Spanish sensation, are included.

The Garden had signed Lou Ambers to box Bobby Pacho, and Indian Hurtado to fight Leonard del Genio, March 6, with the winners meeting two weeks later to determine a challenger for Tony Canzoneri.

Johnston said he would try to book Ramey and Montanez in the semifinal to the McAvoy-Lewis fight.

"Jumping Joe" Savoldi, suspended recently for "conduct unbecoming a wrestler," was reinstated with the warning that if he does any more kicking on New York mats he'll go on the black list for life.

Robinson Won't Run.

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—Previous reports notwithstanding, Elroy Robinson, of Fresno State College, the National A. A. U. 800-meter and N. C. A. A. half-mile champion, will not run in the New York A. C. meet tomorrow night, Dan Ferris, A. A. U. executive secretary, said today.

Cox Meets Zaharias.

Kansas City Joe Cox, recent conqueror of both Ernie and Joey Dusek, will meet his sturdiest opposition to date next Thursday when he squares off with George Zaharias, Colorado bad man, in the weekly wrestling feature at the Turner Arena.

Giants Sign Collegian.

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—The Giants today signed John Toncoff, star catcher for the University of Illinois for the past three seasons, in two of which he batted well over .400.

Columbus U. Beats King Ringmen

Invaders Handed First Defeat; Win Last 2 Bouts by K. O.

By Ben Dulaney.

A SURPRISINGLY polished ring team from little King College in Bristol, Tenn., was barely nosed out by Columbus University before a near-capacity crowd at Turner's Arena last night. The score was 4½ to 3½.

It was the first time King had met defeat this year, and most of the crowd thought the invaders deserved a draw. Consensus was that William Wilkinson, of King, outpointed Leon Shub, former District A. A. U. lightweight champion, but the judges called the affair a draw. Although there were two knockouts and two other almost K.O.'s, the Wilkinson-Shub tussle was the highpoint of the evening.

Bout Called Draw.

Wilkinson came out as if a cannonball were chasing him and the surprised Shub absorbed a terrific beating before he managed to land a blow. With blood flowing freely from both men in the second round, the local boy came back to collect points. The last round was a near battle royal. The affair was probably the best lightweight bout seen here.

Capt. Louis Summers, of King, started the evening off by scoring a neat decision over Raymond Morse. Summers, the more aggressive, absorbed plenty of punishment, but he kept his unbeaten record.

Henry Peterson Wins.

Henry Peterson's wild, sweeping right won the second fight for Columbus, although Paul Ferguson appeared the better fighter. Mystified by his opponent's tactics, Ferguson was able to land but few telling blows.

In the 145-pound affair, Clarence Wilkinson, brother of William started out like a hurricane, but tired badly. Both eyes full of blood, he was battered about in the third round by Columbus' Bob Rawson, and a couple of good rights he planted near the end weren't enough to gain the nod.

Blood and thunder continued. Lionel Meunier, of the Capital school, gained a clear decision over Ford Caldwell. The latter, out on his feet throughout most of the third round, kept fighting to the bell, however. Caldwell carried the fight at first but alos tired.

Grimm Wins Decision.

Robert Grimm decisioned King's Toney Savage in a close 165-pound bout. Savage, hurt badly by continued blows to the stomach, came back fighting in the third.

K. Strecco Brubaker, of King, provided fireworks in the light-heavy bout by placing John McKinney on the canvas after 40 seconds of the second round. The crowd laughed at Brubaker's peculiar tip-toe tactics, but his right hand was made of solid steel. Mc-

W. & L. Matmen Seek Revenge Over Navy

Special Dispatch to The Post.

LEXINGTON, Va., Feb. 14.—Washington and Lee wrestlers, with one of the most spectacular winning streaks in the South to their credit, will journey to Annapolis tomorrow to meet the Navy, only team to mar the Generals' varsity record since they began tossing aside all opposition at the start of the 1930 season.

The W. and L. mat artists have been defeated only once and tied only once since they threw William and Mary for a 33-3 loss at the opening of the campaign in 1930. Both of those blemishes on the record were chalked up by the Midshipmen.

In 1933, Navy handed Coach A. E. Mathis' aggregation a neat 19-13 whipping; and in 1934 gained a tie with the Generals, 16-16. Those are the only meets held between the two in the period from 1930 to date.

Shut Out Two Foes.

In the only two meets in which they have participated this year, Washington and Lee denied opponents a single point. Duke first was turned back, 38-0 and V. P. I., 36-0. A meet with the University of North Carolina was canceled because of snows that made roads impassable.

Washington and Lee varsity and freshman mat teams have participated in 63 meets since the beginning of the 1930 season. In that period the freshmen have been undefeated, including three victories this season.

Coach Mathis, because of Navy's jinx on his teams, has been working his men at fast pace the last two weeks for tomorrow's meet. Observers generally agreed today that he has produced one of his strongest teams this year.

Golf Title to Lynch.

Miami, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—Art Lynch, Mamaroneck, N. Y., the medalist, blazed out near-par golf today to capture the Dixie Amateur tournament by defeating his fellow New Yorker, Cellest Durand, Garden City, L. I., 3 and 7, in the 36-hole final.

Quarles Gets K. O.

Mrs. Hill Beats Helen Dettweiler

Triumphs by 6 and 5 in Nassau Semifinals.

By the Associated Press.

Nassau, Bahamas, Feb 14.—Mrs. Opal S. Hill, the veteran Kansas Citian whose 83 qualifying day won her medal honors, downed Miss Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, D. C., 6 and 5, in the semifinal round of the British Colonial Women's Amateur Golf Tournament here today.

Young Peggy Wattles, of Buffalo, N. Y., upset Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., runner-up for medal honors, 5 and 4, in the other semifinal match.

The two finalists will meet tomorrow.

Nats Expect No Trouble With Myer

Batting Champion Offered $10,000 to $12,000; to Confer at Camp.

ALTHOUGH second baseman Buddy Myer has not signed his 1936 contract and is demanding an increase in the increased salary already offered him, he cannot be termed a holdout in any sense of the term, Secretary Edward B. Eynon said last night.

The Nationals' field captain, who led the American League in batting last season—his best year in the league—is reported to have received a contract calling for a salary between $10,000 and $12,000, which would raise him to the status of the highest paid player on the club. As yet he has not agreed to the terms, however.

Expects Little Trouble.

Eynon pointed out that since this is the only time during the year when players can negotiate with the club owners for salary raises, thus it is only natural for them to dicker over terms. No player, he continued, is considered a holdout until he fails to report for spring training. Eynon expressed the confidence that Myer would be signed "in five minutes," after talking with Clark Griffith, club president, at Orlando.

Earl Whitehill, veteran pitcher; Jack Russell and Buck Newsom, also hurlers, and Outfielder Johnny Stone, also have failed to arrive at an agreement on contracts, but the club expects all to fall in line after a conference at training camp.

Jesse Hill, fleet outfielder, obtained from New York in a recent deal, returned his signed contract yesterday, and Alan Strange, who also had signed, was turned over to Albany, of the International League.

Revolta Cards 69; Leads in Golf Event

By the United Press.

THOMASVILLE, Ga., Feb. 14.—Johnny Revolta, iron-nerved P. G. A. champion, today cracked par by three strokes to take the lead over 63 of America's crack money players in the first 18 holes of the $3,000 Thomasville open tournament.

Revolta, who took first money in the tournament last year, come home with a 69. His card was three strokes under par for the sporty 6,544-yard Glen Arvin course whose par is 72.

The P. G. A. champ led Tony Penna, of Pensacola, Fla., by one stroke, when the Pensacola pro took a 70—2 under par. Ralph Beach, of Baltimore, posted a 71, and Jimmie Thompson, of Ridgewood, N. J., a 72. Wiffy Cox, of Washington, had a 74.

Starting his game while a slow volta played perfect golf, improving rain dripped over the course. Reas skies cleared and the sun came out. He took three birdies for the 18, and never missed the green.

The tournament will continue through tomorrow and Sunday with the low 60 golfers qualifying for the final 36 holes to be played on Sunday.

Dempsey Protege, Burman, Winner

Chicago, Feb. 14 (AP).—To the accompaniment of boos, whistling and handclapping, Jack Dempsey scored, by remote control, a smashing triumph over his one-time manager, Jack Kearns, in the Chicago Stadium ring tonight.

The jeers and hisses of 9,347 spectators were not meant for Kearns or Dempsey, but for their heavyweight fighters, Hank Bath, managed by Kearns, and Clarence "Red" Burman, Baltimore, protege of Dempsey. They fought ten sluggish rounds, with the unanimous decision of the referee and two judges going to Burman.

Bob Tow, 205, Alexandria, Va., knocked out Frank Watonski, 210¾, Buffalo, N. Y., in two rounds.

Rotation Plan Mapped For Umpires in Spring

Chicago, Feb. 14 (AP).—Except in the case of the Chicago White Sox, who will train out on the Pacific Coast, American League umpires will be shifted two or three times from club to club during the approaching spring season exhibition schedule. All but Umpires Moriarty, Dinneen and Quinn will work the games.

President Will Harridge today announced opening assignments as follows:

Detroit, Basil; St. Louis, Johnston; Cleveland, Kolls; Washington, Ormsby; Philadelphia, Hubbard; New York, Geisel; Boston, McGowan; Chicago, Owen. Owen will remain with the White Sox throughout their entire spring schedule. McGowan will join Detroit after the opening game, after which Summers will report with Boston. For the most part, Basil will serve in a relief role.

G. U. Downed By Carnegie, 27 to 23

Lead Changes Several Times; Score at Half Is 12 to 12.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 14.—The Carnegie Tech Tartans strengthened their hold on first place in the Eastern Inter-collegiate Conference by defeating the Georgetown Hoyas, recent conquerors of N. Y. U., at the Tech gym tonight, 27 to 23.

The game was hotly contested throughout and the Hoyas' shooting was far below par, as they suffered their second defeat at the hands of the Tartans.

The defeat shoved the visitors into fifth place in the conference standing. If Pitt, which is playing Temple in Philadelphia had lost, and the Hoyas won, they would have been in a three-way tie with West Virginia and the Panthers.

Hoyas Take Lead.

The Hoyas took the lead at the outset of the game on a foul shot by Nolan, but Carnegie retaliated with a field goal and a free throw to take the lead. The lead changed hands throughout the half. With the Tartans holding a 4-point lead with three minutes to play at 11 to 7, a field goal by Petrosky and successive fouls by Nau, Frank and Bassin tied the score and at the intermission the game was tied up at 12-all.

The second half was a repetition of the first. Carnegie started the scoring when Shomo scored a field goal. Georgetown tied it up on a "sleeper" by Gibeau and then Tech again went into the lead. The lead exchanged hands four times during the half. Georgetown made only nine fouls out of sixteen tries.

Bassin Top Scorer.

Bassin, Georgetown forward, led his team in scoring with three field goals and a free throw for seven points. Shomo, Jagnow and Miller showed the way for the victors with six points each.

Grid Rules Committee Is Gathered on Coast

Palm Springs, Calif., Feb. 14 (AP).—A round of discussion behind closed doors and a round of golf outdoors today completed the first day's business of the National Collegiate Football Rules Committee, meeting to consider proposed changes in the game.

Walter Langford, of New York, committee secretary, said any decisions will not be announced before the end of the conference Sunday.

Among the coaches and athletic heads called here were Dana X. Bible, of Nebraska; Fielding H. Yost, of Michigan; Claude (Tiny) Thornhill, of Stanford; Ray Morrison, of Vanderbilt; Nobel Kizer, of Purdue; Amos Alonzo Stagg, of the College of the Pacific, and William Bingham, athletic director at Harvard.

Carnera in Car Crash.

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 14 (AP).—Primo Carnera, heavyweight boxer, escaped uninjured in a motor car accident near here today.

Police said a car driven by the former heavyweight champion was in collision with a parked machine owned by F. M. Whaley, of Savannah. Both were damaged slightly.

4,000 Fans to See Maryland U.'s Sports Carnival Tonight

Court Battle Will Open Program

Quintet to Oppose C. U.; Terps Favored Over V. M. I. Boxers.

THE most elaborate extravaganza of the District's winter sports schedule will be staged tonight at Ritchie Coliseum where Old Line athletic officials will be host to some 4,000 fans—at the usual rate of admission—in presenting the University of Maryland's third annual "All University Night."

There will be much tripping of the light fantastic by beauteous babes from the School of Arts and Sciences, and much clinking of sabres and clicking of heels by the R. O. T. C. boys. If you're one of those die-hards who must have athletics there are the Catholic University-Maryland Basketball game and the V. M. I.-Maryland boxing match.

24 Events Carded.

There will be, in a word, everything but a buffet supper with a keg of beer. Twenty-four events have been arranged to proclaim and publicize the functions of the University and students.

Catholic University's courtmen are on edge for their annual duel with the Terrapins, honed to the finest form possible by two strenuous games earlier in the week, followed by enough rest to guarantee peak condition. Their unexpected victory over John Marshall in Jersey City Monday night indicates that the players finally are attaining the form their supporters expect of them.

Tough Combination.

But Maryland, too, has satisfactorily demonstrated that it is ready for the question, and the Terps are a tough combination to whip on their home floor.

Both teams boast a plentiful supply of veterans with a sophomore here and there to supply an added punch to the battle. Capt. Bernie Lieb, Hermie Schmarr, Zeke Brown and Sam Pagano are Catholic's survivors of last winter's epic struggle. Maryland has Al Waters, Bernie Buscher, Vic Willis and Charley Keller from last year, and it is better fortified in reserves than its ancient rival.

Basketball will open the lengthy program promptly at 7:30 o'clock. The early start was agreed on to enable Catholic University students to return to Brookland for the Cards' boxing match with Pittsburgh, and to allow those remaining to get home some time before morning.

Boxers Are Favorites.

Maryland should win as it pleases in boxing, although V. M. I. always wages a stubborn battle in any sport. Three newcomers to the Old Line larruping squad will make their debut tonight, one a lad who has won his spurs on the cinder-path. He is Bob Slye, a veteran hurdler, who will fight in the 125-pound class.

Blair Smith, reserve end in football, has been appointed defender of the 165-pound class, and Ed Fletcher has been elected to look after the Cadets' heavyweight, if they have one. V. M. I. may forfeit in this class.

The line-ups:

Varsity Basketball, 7:30.

Mt. Rainier Wins; County Games Off

Displaying a smooth passing attack coupled with a stubborn defense, the undefeated Mount Rainier Athletic Club swamped the Takoma Fire Department five by the score of 64-12 on the Mounts floor last night. The lads from the District Line ripped the cords from all angles. Every player who broke into the scoring column on the Mounts' squad got at least 10 points.

Manager Bud Bellman of the Athletic Club is looking for stiffer opposition. Any one interested call EMerson 8108.

The Mount Rainier Reserves would like to schedule a game for this Thursday night with some 145-pound team. Call Robert Bellman at GReenwood 2477.

All games in the Prince George's County High School League were postponed yesterday. The athletic committee desires to have these teams play Tuesday if it so fits the individual schedules. This would alleviate the crowding of the schedule during the last week of play.

4 St. John's Players Are Ruled Ineligible

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 13.—Coach Valentine (Dutch) Lentz, St. John's basketball coach, had little cause for rejoicing today as his court forces, humiliated by Maryland last night, were further demoralized by injuries and ineligibility rulings.

Charles Koogle, regular guard; Jack Owens, reserve forward; Pete Simpoulos and George Bonisant, reserve guards, were declared ineligible today. Simultaneously it was revealed that Capt. Len DeLisio, former Washington scholastic star, is suffering from a bruised hip; Bill Ross, forward, is out with a sprained ankle, and Joe Galloway, reserve center, is through for the season because of injuries.

Santa Anita Offers $25,000 Test Today

New York, Feb. 15 (AP).—Major interest in today's national racing program centers on the West Coast, where 12 3-year-olds are named for the renewal of the $25,000 Santa Anita Derby.

The 1 1-16-mile event appears to be a wide open race, but Mrs. Silas B. Mason's entry of Valevictorian and He Did are expected to face the barrier the choice at 5 to 2. Valevictorian has been performing consistently this winter and if he runs back to his last victorious effort over Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' The Fighter and Mrs. Payne Whitney's Galsac, he should have no trouble leading the field home.

Megaw Stakes Draws Star Bowlers

DUCKPIN stars of Washington, neighboring cities and possibly a few from New England will congregate at the Georgetown Recreation alleys at 2 p. m. today to honor one of the city's foremost maplewood stars, Walter (Red) Megaw, in the second annual rolling of the Megaw Sweepstakes.

Close to 50 entries are expected to take part in the 10-game stretch, and with a small entrance fee of $7.50, which includes cost of games rolled, the prize fund will be in the neighborhood of $250. The second block is scheduled at 7:30.

Astor Clarke, District No. 1 bowler, is the defending champion and last season's victory entitles him to a free entry. Free entries from preliminaries rolled throughout the city have tended to boost the entry list.

The Boys and Juniors Virginia State Tournament will be rolled tonight at the Rosslyn, Va., drives at 7 o'clock. Joe Dodd, present No. 1 ranking junior bowler of the United States and the Richmond city champion, will defend his laurels in representing the Richmond Health Center, and Henry Waldbauer and Henry Gunst, also of Richmond, will compete in the boys' division Norfolk, Clarendon and Rosslyn are boasting a group of strong representatives.

The Temple-Dixie Pigs have a tough assignment this week-end in the Southern Inter-City League. The locals, seeking first place in the event of a breakdown of the leading Occidental five, tackle the strong Recreation team, of Baltimore, on the latter's home drives.

Armstrong Trounces Dunbar Tossers, 40-19

Armstrong held on gamely to her lead on the city championship colored high school title when her quintet defeated Dunbar decisively on the Terrell court, 40-19.

Loss of the game by the Armstrong five would have meant also a loss of the South Atlantic Conference championship held by this team for the past two years. Yesterday, at the conclusion of the Dunbar game, Armstrong was tied with Douglass High School, of Baltimore, for the conference honors.

Miner Teachers College defeated St. Paul College, of Lawrenceville, Va., last night on the Cardozo court, 48 to 19. The game was fast and rough in spots, with the Miner quintet holding the lead all the way.

Columbus U.'s Boxers Nose Out King

Kinney, already groggy, absorbed a mighty punch to the chin and was out cold for two minutes.

Emil Gavlack, a blond heavyweight, stopped Morris Wolfe after a minute and a half of the first round. Referee Robert Morris stopped things when it became apparent that Wolfe had only a very vague idea of whether he was in Washington or China. It took a dozen quick punches for him to reach that state.

Interest was added to the meeting by the fact that both Bobby Goldstein and Jeb Kelly, Columbus and King coaches, respectively, were star featherweights at the University of Virginia, and received their training from Johnny LaRowe. King's fighters especially fought in similar style to the Cavaliers.

179-pound class—Steece Brubaker (King) knocked out John McKinney in 40 seconds of second round.

Unlimited—Emil Gavlack (King) won technical knockout over Morris Wolfe in 1 minute 39 seconds of first round.

The Cadets, led by Taylor and Andy Trzeciak, got away to an early lead, but Billy Fox and Ed Gray headed a rally that left the visitors behind only 13 to 15 at half time. Oscar Saunders, Howard Bliss and Trzeciak scored in rapid succession in the second half to give V. M. I. a safe lead.

Central's Rally Downs Tech, 33 to 24

Fones Leader in Attack; Losers Clinch Last Place in Series.

By George Considine.

FLASHING their most impressive form of the waning interhigh series, Coach Jack Ray's Central courtmen withstood a lusty Tech challenge yesterday in the latter's gym and won going away. The final figures were 33 and 24. Don Fones taking individual honors with 10 points.

Tech obviously had game-winning notions at the outset, because it swept to a commanding lead only to slump badly in the second period, when not one point was scored for the home team. A late rally failed to bother the smooth-working Centralites. Tech's defeat clinched the cellar-position in the final series standings.

Bill Rhea started the ball rolling for Tech with a beautiful angle shot, which Jimmy Vermillion followed with a pot shot. While Dobyns and Merchant were increasing the lead, Billy Vermillion, Don Fones and Bill Thompson tallied one field goal to bring Central within striking distance at 9 to 6.

Central Takes Lead.

Throughout the second period the Tech cagers couldn't budge from their 9-count, but Central drew abreast and pulled into the lead by virtue of the scoring talents of Fones, Poole, Thompson and Vermillion. At half-time Central was ahead 13 to 9.

After Jimmy Vermillion had accounted for a brace of foul shots, Fones quickly retaliated with a beauty from midfloor. Merchant tallied two field goals for Tech, but Thompson and Saffron enabled Central to lead 23 to 16 with one period to go.

Coach LaRowe called for just enough sparring to make sure that his charges were on their toes. Then he sat them up to work on the bags to keep in top condition for the next to last dual meet of the winter campaign.

The Virginia squad of some 17, including boxers, coaches, managers, team doctor and trainer, will leave here by automobile after an early lunch tomorrow and will reach Richmond in time for the weighing in with the Spider entrants at 4 o'clock. Then they'll go into seclusion at a Richmond hotel until time for them to step into the ring at the Mosque.

Court Pairings To Be Made Today

Entry Headline Reached; More Than 70 Teams Will Compete.

WASHINGTON'S best basketball teams in the 100-pound, 115-pound, 130-pound, 145-pound men's and girls' unlimited classes have entered the District A. A. U. basketball championships, which The Post is sponsoring, according to the entries, which closed last night at midnight at headquarters, the Boys' Club of Washington.

With the lid to be pried off next Tuesday at Heurich's gym, indications are that more than 70 teams will battle for honors in the six divisions.

Are Well Satisfied.

"We are well satisfied with the entry this season, considering that the tournament is being held at least three weeks earlier than is customary," said Winfree Johnson, District A. A. U. basketball chairman, who is in charge of The Post games.

While Chairman Johnson and his committee worked well past midnight accepting last-minute entries and stamping their approval on teams and players, the District challengers wondered how the luck of the draw was going to work.

The pairings will be made today, and the openings games Tuesday will be announced tomorrow morning. It is planned to hold three games the inaugural night, and a well-known sportsman will toss out the first ball.

Unlimited Teams.

Among the crack unlimited teams signed up were the George Washington University freshmen, champions of 1934; Rinaldi Tailors, big favorites; Bureau of Investigation Blues and Whites, Delaware and Hudson, Resettlement, Olmsted Grill, Heurich Senate Beer, District Fire Department, young Democrats, of Falls Church; Rockville, A. C., Flying Eagles and Central Y. M. C. A.

In the 145-pound class the defending champions, Twin Oaks Blacks Hawks, St. Martin's, Washington Boys' Club, Georgetown Boys' Club, Jewish Community Center, Merrick Boys' Club head the list.

All of the Boys' Clubs have entered the 130, 115 and 130-pound classes.

United Typewriter girls, Sherwood, Leland, Agriculture, Mount Rainier, Jewish Community Center and Rockville were among the fast feminine teams entered.

Postponing of Tilt Causes Prep Row

Gonzaga, St. John's Dispute Imperils League.

Amid claims of "forfeit, forfeit," athletic officials of St. John's and Gonzaga Schools yesterday bickered strenuously over postponement by Gonzaga of last night's scheduled basketball game between the two institutions. Possible wrecking of the Prep School League hangs on the dispute. St. John's claimed a forfeiture because Gonzaga, unable to obtain a gymnasium for the game, refused to play before Monday night.

Coach Irving Holbrook and Brother Egbert of St. John's, league champions, assert notice of postponement was not given until Wednesday. Coach Orrel Mitchell of Gonzaga claims notice was given Monday. Brother Egbert told Mitchell, "We will consider the game forfeited if you do not play by Monday night." Mitchell retorted, "Consider it forfeited."

The situation may be ironed out next week at a meeting of athletic officials of the three league teams, Georgetown Prep, St. John's and Gonzaga. Failure would probably break up the league.

Rinaldi Five Beats G. W. Frosh, 24-22

Hard-fought is a rather mild word to describe last night's basketball game at George Washington University gymnasium, where the Rinaldi Tailors eked out a 24-to-22 victory over the G. W. Freshmen. It was the Frosh's second defeat at the hands of the Rinaldis.

After a comparatively slow start, George Washington put on pressure, and through the efforts of Borum and Faris took a lead of 12 to 7. Rinaldi rallied, however, to tie the score at 13-all at the half-way mark.

As play was resumed the battle really waxed warm, with both sides playing airtight ball. Seven minutes of the second-half had elapsed before the deadlock was broken, Faris sinking a beauty to put the Freshmen ahead.

Sandlot Youth Waits Selection Tomorrow

By John R. Vosburgh.

FINALLY narrowed down to 28 of Washington's most promising young ballplayers, a blue ribbon list of sandlot stars was being carefully scrutinized last night as The Washington Post deliberated on what players it will send South for a free try-out with the Nats.

Announcement of the player selected will be made in tomorrow's Sunday Post.

Actually 30 in number, so far as nominations are concerned, two of the players being picked by two leagues, the list resembles an honor roll of the city's sandlot ranks. The stars nominated represent the official selections of 15 leagues operating under The Post Sandlot Baseball Association.

12 Are Pitchers.

Twelve of the choices are pitchers and five are catchers, probably revealing a feeling on the part of some leagues that what the Nats need most in hurlers and receivers. Two are described as pitchers or first-basemen and one a pitcher and outfielder.

Three outfielders, three first-basemen and four who romp at the other infield posts complete the cast, along with one candidate who is equally at home catching or playing shortstop.

City and suburban ranks are entered in the race—weekday and Sunday leagues. The Northern Virginia and Montgomery County circuits, representing the suburban districts with a total of 24 strong teams, are bidding strongly for the honor with such able candidates as Dick Nichols, Ralph Cooper, Bob Buckley and Davis Ahearn.

The Post's Sunday League circuits are offering some high-class competition with such loops as the Atlantic and Pacific, Police Boys Club and National City "A," "B" and Junior offering an array of stars including Tack Ensor, Joe Merella, Wade Pembroke, Jack Carver, Huck Wynne, Fred Wahler, Frank Baroni, Jimmy Schwab, Lou Mathias and Charlie Mackie.

To complicate matters further the Week-day League has thrown in a small army of youthful experts of big-league potentialities. The stars of such leagues as the Department Store, Industrial, National Capital, Departmental, Federal, Church, Bankers and Army and Navy are being given the most stringent consideration.

Among those nominated from these circuits are such well known stars as Lefty Jewett, Blackie Adair, Bill Albert, Frog Robey, Dick Nichols, Conrad Royer, Frank Baroni, Knocky Thomas, Erwin Ruhling, Brother Love, Ernie Boggs, Charlie Torice, Lefty Manners, Joe Cardwell, Jesse James and Lyman McAvoy.

Several Considerations.

But names alone do not make the ball player nor The Post selection. The records, the habits of conditioning, the age, physique, health and batting or pitching averages of the candidates are being seriously examined.

All in all, the player finally chosen will be "the tops" of "the tops" of Washington's sandlot ranks. Whether he is a former college or high school star or a young veteran of the sandlots, exclusively, the chances are The Post Association's loss of him will be the Nats' gain.

By Paul Gallico.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN Feb. 14. — It is gradually dawning on your correspondent that figure skating in Europe is not the happiest sport in the world when it comes to judging. Apparently, if one can go by what one hears, it is not the cleanest. The whole thing is a trifle reminiscent of the dog show, with the contestants growling and snapping at one another and the judges.

I can't pin the information received on any one, as all the stories are preceded by the well-known sentence, "Don't quote me, but——." There seems to be considerable swapping, bartering and horse-trading going on among the figure-skating judges: one of those "you judge our little girl in first place and we will take care that your little girl gets third, since she's not very good, anyway."

Must Be Good.

Of course, the figure skaters must be good when performing on the ice or the crowd will catch on, but it's a great help to have a couple of judges in your pocket and no one seems to think that anything is wrong with that over here. Figure-skating judges are funny-looking dodos, anyway. They have adopted the American open system of score cards. The judges, at the whistle blow, fumble in a container and produce numbered cards, giving the ratings. Some amazing discrepancies crop up, but the judges solemnly stand by the cards, raised with an innocent look on their faces. Everything may be copacetik, but it doesn't look it, and all those yarns I hear about barters and deals can't be cockeyed. They came from sources which are pretty reliable.

Good Show Brewing.

Your correspondent realizes that the fate of the Nation and the success of the New Deal does not depend on this, but after watching the winter sports for nine days steady you get that way.

A good show is brewing between Cecilia Colledge, an English girl, and Sonja Henie, the lovely Norwegian lass, tomorrow. The stadium house is sold out to spectators who wish to see world-famous girls compete. There is no love lost between the two. Colledge is close enough to the Henie school of figure skaters to give her a fight in the free-style events.

Considerable meowing is going on in the ranks of the figure skaters in anticipation of tomorrow's event. You will read stories that the Germans are poor sports and that the Americans have been booed. Your correspondent finds that the Germans are not worse sports than the others. The offense, not the individual, gets the booing. Your correspondent has seen sports at home and in many lands and still is looking for what might be called good sports. As yet he has not found them. Apparently everyone leaves his manners at home while viewing sports events.

When a skating judge displeased some of the spectators yesterday, three Austrian correspondents rose up, pointed their fingers and yelled "pfui." One incensed Italian writer seemed on the point of hurling his typewriter at a hockey official working in the German-Italian game.

One of the things that the Germans lack when viewing sports is humor. They grew petulent when the Canadians walloped Germany at hockey last night. Sport just ain't funny over here.

I am puzzled as to why a man of Adolph Hitler's intelligence did not make it a point not to receive a salute from the world's athletes. There seems no particular reason why Olympic athletes should salute a country's boss just because the competition happens to be held there, except common courtesy. But I would consider it the greatest courtesy if Hitler would request no salute.

Hitler sat like a Roman emperor surrounded by his court in a stadium box yesterday. A pair skating received and returned the salutes of gladiators about to perform. True, it made a pretty picture, but it also made some of Hitler's guests feel distinctly uncomfortable, which is not a part of good hosting.

It looks as though if we are not a little careful we might win something tomorrow morning as the two-man bob team of Ivan Brown and Alan Washbond led by three seconds at the end of the first day's trial.

Massanutten Beaten By Western in Tank

Massanutten Military Academy's swimming team experienced stubborn opposition from Western High last night before finally defeating the Georgetowners, 45 to 30, in the Central Y. M. C. A. pool. Brown, Western back stroker, was the sole first-place winner for Western in the eight events held. It was the Cadets' second win over Western this season.

Nectarine Wins 3d in Row at Hialeah

Filly Rallies In Stretch To Score

Favorite Beats Quel Jeu by Half Length on Fast Track.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Feb. 14. Nectarine, consistent 4-year-old daughter of Bull Dog, staged a courageous stretch drive to chalk up her third consecutive victory in the Valentine Purse here this afternoon. The bay filly, judiciously ridden by Joe Renick, gave Mrs. Emil Denemark, of Chicago, her ninth success of the current meeting.

Quel Jeu, the Arden Farm's 6-year-old, lost the purse by a half length. C. V. Whitney's High Glee, favorite in the six-horse field, again failed to stay the distance, finishing three lengths behind in the third hole. Nectarine, paying $5.80 for $2, made the smart time of 1:36 2-5 over a track that remained fast despite intermittent showers.

High Glee Takes Lead.

High Glee, as expected, jumped into a quick lead. Renick had Nectarine away in second position, but let the filly take her time while the speed demons battled for command. Quel Jeu was sent after the pacemaker by Tommy Malley, with the result that High Glee had to run head and head with the sharp-stepping veteran.

Nectarine was running in full stride as the field entered the stretch. Renick sat down and rode his mightiest. High Glee was through after straightening out, Quel Jeu drawing into a daylight lead. It was not until two jumps from the wire that Nectarine gained her objective.

Dnieper Is Winner.

Dnieper, Mrs. P. A. B. Widener's lone Florida Derby candidate, turned in an impressive mile to win the Daytona Beach purse, a test for 3-year-olds exclusively that served as a secondary feature. Johnny Gilbert earned a double astride the gelded son of Kiev.

The solemn Syrian urged the $4.80 choice to the front entering the back-stretch, shaking off the Hare. Trebor went after Dnieper but never could threaten, trailing the winner by two lengths. The Hare was a poor third. Dnieper covered the eight furlongs in 1:36 4-5 under 116 pounds.

SHOT UP, away in a tangle, moved up rapidly on the outside to reach a forward position when leaving the back stretch, came determinedly under punishment when straightened into the home stretch, drew on even terms with YORK inside the closing furlong and won going away after taking the lead. YORK, away in the first flight, disposed of BITSY WITSY, saved ground, but failed to rally when put to punishment in the closing furlong. FIRST BID obtained racing room on the inside and raced prominently all the way.

SECOND RACE—Three furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from chute. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:54. Off at 3:02. Winner, James W. Parrish's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—HATTY, $12.50, $5.10, $3.50; LITTLE UPSET, $3.10, $2.40; JACKMAL, $3.80.

HATTY, breaking swiftly, drew clear in the opening furlong, swerved slightly inside the closing furlong but had enough in reserve to withstand LITTLE UPSET, later, chased along in closest pursuit of the winner from the beginning and was gaining stoutly approaching the finish. JACKMAL held a forward position from the start and finished resolutely on the inside. PATTI was making up ground steadily nearing the close.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:30. Off at 3:35. Winner, Sage Stable's b. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MICROPHONE, $5.70, $3.50, $2.80; CROWNING GLORY, $3.20, $2.90; BLUE DAY, $4.00.

MICROPHONE moved into a short lead in the opening furlong, went clear when reaching the turn, saved ground and, kept under mild pressure, held CROWNING GLORY safe in the late stages. CROWNING GLORY worked his way on to the outside of the leaders and closed gamely under a stout drive. BLUE DAY, forced to race on the outside early, slipped through on the inside when reaching the home stretch and finished determinedly.

FOURTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,100; allowances. The Daytona Beach. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 4:03. Off at 4:08. Winner, Mrs. Peter A. B. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DNIEPER, $4.80, $3.10, $2.40; TREBOR, $3.40, $2.60; THE HARE, $3.50.

DNIEPER, handling his weight nicely, outran his field to gain command going into the back stretch, was rated until challenged, then came away nicely when shaken up. TREBOR followed within striking distance of the leaders, ran down THE HARE after six furlongs, moved up boldly in the last five-sixteenths, but was too soon enough in the final drive. THE HARE was under strong handling after settling in his best stride, but was unable to cope with the first two.

FIFTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,200; allowances. The St. Valentine. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:35. Off at 4:37½. NECTARINE, squeezed back going into the back stretch and permitted to settle in her best stride before cottering her position, went through on the inside of WACOCHE when leaving the back stretch, came to the outside for the final drive and continued to get up in the last 50 yards. QUEL JEU raced in close attendance of HIGH GLEE to force a fast pace, took command midway of the home stretch and held on courageously when collared. HIGH GLEE weakened after being overtaken and barely lasted to stall off OLD STORY.

SIXTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:00. Off at 5:00½. Winner, Chicago Stable's b. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FOXIANA, $8.10, $3.30, $3.50; HEROWIN, $3.30, $3.30; SEEDLING, $4.50.

FOXIANA, going in her best form under improved handling, followed close to the pace after entering into a contending position, came to the outside to wear AIR LINE down entering the home stretch and had enough in reserve to stall off HEROWIN. Latter, very sluggish in the early stages after breaking very slow, circled his field and closed full of run. SEEDLING entered contention gradually on the outside and held on gamely.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Puse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:37. Off at 5:40. Winner, Mrs. Ethel D. Jacobs' ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—EXETER, $14.40, $7.10, $4.70; STILL ALARM, $6.90, $4.70; HIGHEST POINT, $3.70.

EXETER outran his field into the home stretch, stalled off stout efforts from COLORIST and PEACE MOVE, rallied nicely under a severe drive and barely lasted to withstand STILL ALARM. Latter, racing in improved fashion, circled her field in the last half furlong and was wearing the winner down at every stride nearing the finish. HIGHEST POINT moved up gamely entering the home stretch and held on well for the final drive.

Dear Al: Hialeah Race Track, Feb. 14.

Jockey Eddie Arcaro, now serving a ten-day suspension for rough riding, will leave Tuesday for Santa Anita, where he will ride Azucar, last year's winner, in the $110,000 added race a week from Saturday. Earl Steffen is already at the West Coast track. He will have the mount on Whopper, while Wayne Wright, another Florida jockey, will pilot Top Row in the struggle for the big wad of dough. Jockey Jimmy Lynch will resume his saddle career on Monday. He has fully recovered from a broken collarbone suffered in a spill here on the third day of the meeting. Apprentice Jockey Kastner's victory on Loischen yesterday was his first for his new employer, Trainer George Phillips. The new crop of juveniles will feature tomorrow's program. Sixteen youngsters have been named for the $2,000 Nursery Stakes No. 1 to be contested over the usual straightaway course. The race is for colts and geldings. Clocker Mike say, "The game is good. Send more money."

BILL.

First race—Quickly seems the best suited of the sprinters named for this event. Gets in with only 105 pounds. Little Dinah, not particularly partial to the six and a half route, will be dangerous nevertheless. Headin' Home for the show. Clocker Mike reports a fair workout on Miss Rainbow.

Second race—Captain Jerry draws an inexperienced rider, but is far too fit to be placed off the top in this sort of company. Lativich's last was a beaut and he will have to be dealt with in the closing stages. Big Red to take care of the others.

Third race—Brevity gives away weight here and seems capable of winning despite that fact. Don Meade will do the riding, and I see no reason for mistakes. Mont Blanc and Grog for the place and show awards.

Fourth race—Maedic and Macspur, the Maemere Farm pair, get the call in the day's juvenile event. Both are powerful and promising youngsters. The first named will draw the most backing. Happy Road has the outside post position, the best of the stall gates. Should Gilbert ride this one will be a keen factor. Don Guillermo may improve that first effort here.

Fifth race—Rushaway comes off a good effort to tackle stiffer opposition. Light weight and the possibilities that Meade will ride forces me to take a chance. Maeriel draws 126 pounds but is a threat. Gallant Gay for the minor award.

Sixth race—Canimar fairly ate up the track in winning over at Tropical Park and then raced rather dully here. With the money-riding Joe Renick aboard this one might awake. He likes the route. Crowned Head and Mixed Party for the remainder. The last named is in with a feather impost and could surprise.

Seventh race—Silence III is a consistent sort on the turf course and may add another purse here. Eudes is said to be ready for a killing. Dangerous among these. Slave to show.

Best beat—Brevity.

Oil Industry Outlook Best In Five Years

Earnings May Top 1930, Which Were Second Only to 1929.

New York, Feb. 14.—The petroleum industry has begun 1936 with the most favorable earnings prospects since the beginning of the depression, according to the Standard Statistics Co., today. It is too early to make even a tentative forecast of results for the year, but, if present possibilities are realized, earnings may equal or exceed those of 1930, which were second only to 1929 in the history of the industry.

This favorable outlook rests upon the further strengthening of the statistical position, resulting from additional gains in consumption, particularly of gasoline, and continued restriction of production. The combination is causing a moderate recovery in prices to the best levels in years.

Although the trend of crude oil production was steadily upward during 1935, consumption increased at a faster rate, permitting a reduction of 22,300,000 barrels in stocks of crude oil during the year, according to estimates of the American Petroleum Institute. Total supplies reached approximately the lowest level since 1922.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 14 (AP).—Stockholders of Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation today approved a $100,000,000 bond issue, of which $40,000,000 is for immediate use in the building of new steel mills and other improvements.

Copper Price Raised to 9½, Top Since 1931

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 14.—Phelps Dodge Corporation one of the largest American copper producers, announced today that effective tomorrow morning it would increase the price of copper for the domestic trade to 9½ cents a pound from the 9¼-cent level which has been in effect since October 8, 1935.

Meanwhile the company was refusing to accept business on any basis except the 9½-cent level. Other major producers made no immediate announcement of a change, but the matter was under consideration at the offices of most of the larger concerns.

The advance made by Phelps Dodge, which will carry copper to the highest levels since April, 1931, reflected the company's individual position, it was explained, and was due to a number of factors, including the satisfactory manner in which the domestic trade has absorbed metal in recent months.

The price of copper for export, meanwhile, was thrown temporarily into a state of confusion. It was reported in trade circles that there were plenty of buyers at levels as high as 8.90 cents a pound, c. i. f. European bases, but so far as could be learned sellers had withdrawn from the market pending a clarification of the situation.

On Thursday, most transactions in copper for export were made on the basis of 8.85 cents a pound. The steady absorption of copper abroad, and the extreme firmness of prices recently was believed to have played an important part in the improvement in the domestic price structure.

Kentucky Tobacco Brings $2,450,262

Maysville, Ky., Feb. 14 (AP).—The Maysville Tobacco auctions closed today, reporting that sales of 14,951,415 pounds since the market opened in December had enriched growers by $2,450,262.35.

Farmers in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri patronized the local warehouses. Average price for the season was $16.39, against $16 last year.

The Market

Stocks Improve Moderately in Face of Profit-Taking; Government Bonds Firm.

New York, Feb. 14.—Some traders were reminded by the day that perhaps a little too much emotionalism had entered into the price of certain stocks, and by profit-taking and a bit of short selling a few issues were brought down from a romantic to a more practical basis. The process did not go far to reduce prices, and the early weakness gave way to a firmer tone in the afternoon, but without appreciable increase in trading volume. At best the market was irregular. Turnover was approximately 2,600,000 shares. Government bonds hardened. May wheat closed ¼ cent higher at 98¼ cents a bushel.

Steel shares took a back position, after their burst of the past few days, and the metals, airplanes and motors came forward. Curtiss-Wright, Douglas and Bendix were favorite airs. Metals were helped by the rise in copper prices. Phelps-Dodge, Anaconda and Kennecott were the leaders. Utilities were firm. American Telephone drew attention with its jump of more than 4 points to a new high price. Other communication shares were quiet.

Rubber stocks were strong with the commodity. Low-priced motor issues were fancied, particularly Studebaker, Paige, White and Reo. Chrysler rallied into new high ground after an early dip. General Motors clung to a fractional gain. Rails were unsettled. Southern Railway and Kansas City Southern issues were strong at new high prices. Great Northern acted tamer. Westinghouse gave up more than 2 points. American Snuff continued weak.

Stocks singled out for special attention and scoring moderate gains were Commercial Solvents, Artloom and Mengel. Hercules Powder reentered the century club after an absence of more than six years. Mail orders, tobaccos and oils were lower. Colonial Beacon featured dealings at the odd-lot post with the largest volume and a gain of more than 4 points. American Crystal Sugar continued into new high ground on fairly large volume. Cuban American was weak.

Francs Rally.

An abrupt reversal in the course of francs, canceling virtually all the ground lost yesterday, was the feature of the exchange market. The recovery was partly attributed to a belief that the political consequences of the attack upon the French Socialist leader would not be as serious as was at first supposed. Another factor was renewed efforts for currency expansion by inflationists in the House, accompanied by reports from Washington that the use of silver seigniorage would play a part in the President's forthcoming plan to meet the soldier bonus expenditure and to achieve economies which would partially offset such expenditure.

Sterling failed to reveal, comparatively, the same strength that francs did, which suggested that French rather than American developments were dominant influences. The rise in the French unit brought vigorous recoveries in other gold exchanges, though none crossed the gold shipping point. Another factor in the franc's rise was an improvement in the outlook for a sterling loan to the French treasury.

Meanwhile the week's Federal Reserve system statement showed a continuance of the trend noted last week, namely, in sharp gains in currency in circulation, another loss of gold, and a continuance of reduction in bank reserves, partly because of the gold loss and partly because of the withdrawal from the banks of Treasury deposits. Excess reserves for the country now are down to an even three billions, a figure which certainly is far too high for comfort.

Trade Outlook.

On the trade side the French figures do not give much cause for confidence in the franc. January exports of French goods were down 240,000,000 francs from a year ago, while imports rose 78,000,000 francs, and the excess of imports over exports was 820,000,000 francs, the largest adverse balance since June, 1933.

On our own trade front the current statistics are favorable. Apparently the overthow of the processing taxes and the decline in cotton prices have helped textiles. Cotton consumption in January increased to 591,000 bales, from 550,000 a year ago and 498,000 bales in December. Exports were higher than last year, but were cut sharply from December, a seasonal occurrence. Spindles in operation toward the close of January were slightly fewer than for the preceding month, but were considerably more numerous than last year.

Railroad freight car loadings last week turn out to have risen a little over the preceding week and were well above a year ago. The gain in traffic in spite of the heavy weather, the improved crop outlook, preparations for a revival in the building industry and for a good motor year, the stiffer tone in steel scrap and in copper, and rising currency circulation point to more active trade this spring. It will be some time before the bonus will be paid, but payments will in many cases be anticipated. Consumption industries, at any rate, stand to gain a little from all that spending.

Note Backing.

Comment was made last week to the elimination by the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank of Government securities pledged behind its note circulation under the Glass-Steagall act. That left five Federal Reserve banks still obliged to use Government securities as part security for their currency. This week's reserve system statement discloses that three other reserve banks, those at Richmond, St. Louis and Kansas City, are now whittling down their pledged Government securities. The first two eliminated $3,000,000 each this week and Kansas City knocked off $4,000,000. The San Francisco bank backtracked and added $3,000,000. The Atlanta bank, badly deficient in gold certificate reserves is still carrying $42,000,000 of Government securities behind its $152,377,000 outstanding notes. For the system as a whole only $118,000,000 of Government securities are now pledged against $3,656,138,000 of notes in circulation, gold credits and a small amount of commercial paper securing most of it. A week ago the amount so pledged was $125,000,000. The Glass-Steagall amendment to the reserve act will not lapse for another year.

Investors.

Commissioner Landis of SEC said in a Washington address yesterday that, in making available voluminous information concerning corporations and their securities, the American nation would be transformed from speculators into a nation of investors. The first chairman of SEC, Joseph Kennedy, never would have said anything like that. His experience must have taught him all too well that the huge majority of the lamb public that dabbles in the securities markets does so in breathless pursuit of that strong impulse known as speculative. They hear a tip and want to beat the other fellow to the money. They invariably ask about their stocks after they have been stuck with them, as any investment counsellor or worker on a financial publication well knows. It is a good idea to require corporations to tell their stockholders the full story, to force regular and accurate reports on assets and earnings, but such information helps the skilled investor: no attention ever is paid to it by the rank and file of security buyers. They aren't especially interested in it, and would not understand it if they were. They think markets go up and down because certain vague people, known as "they," put them up and down.

Capital Ranks Among Leaders In Recovery

Washington was among the 46 cities of the United States that were closest to normal at the end of January, according to the monthly survey of business conducted by the research division of Brooke, Smith & French, Inc., New York and Detroit. At the end of the month, Washington stood only 7 per cent below normal. This was an increase of 4 per cent over the preceding month and a gain of 23 per cent over January a year ago.

Sixty-three of the 147 trading areas of the United States showed business gains in January, 19 remained the same and 65 lost ground, but only slightly, according to the advertising concern's report. At the same time, the national index declined 3 per cent, due chiefly to the fact that the automobile industry put its new cars on the market two months earlier than usual, depriving January of the stimulation that normally comes at that time.

21 Per Cent Below Normal.

"However, the January, 1936, national index—21 per cent below normal—may be compared with 33 per cent below for January a year ago," states the Brooke, Smith & French report.

January's business gains were widely scattered throughout the country. New England, northern New York State, northern New Jersey and the Pacific Coast, together with the Southern oil areas, showed the most outstanding improvement. These areas were closest to normal in January:

Albuquerque, Austin, Bakersfield, Baltimore, Bangor, Beaumont, Billings, Boise, Charleston, W. Va., Charlotte, Cheyenne, Colorado Springs, Columbia, S. Gen. Electric Ordered To Tell Patent Profit

New York, Feb. 14 (AP).—Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe today directed the General Electric Co. to account for profits estimated in excess of $5,000,000, arising out of a patent infringement action brought by the Electric Machinery Manufacturing Co. in 1933.

Judge Coxe held that 15 of the patent claims advanced by the plaintiff were valid and found that two systems to effect a control of synchronized motors devised by General Electric were in violation of the plaintiff's patents.

Mead Proposes Banks Finance Bonus Payment

Bonds Could Be Held as Collateral Against Cash, Editor Says.

New York, Feb. 14.—A proposal for financing the veterans' bonus without increasing taxation or issuing additional currency was proposed today by Joseph Mead, editor of Economic Forum, in an address on "Government Financing for Stability and Security" delivered at a luncheon meeting of the Young Men's Board of Trade of New York at the Lawyers Club. Mr. Mead suggested that provision be made so that the banks could advance cash on the bonus bonds on a loan basis, taking the bonds as collateral and charging a "preferential rate of interest."

"By offering this service," said Mr. Mead, "the banks can keep a large supply of the bonds from coming on the market at one time. For such bonds as the banks might acquire outright, because the veteran wished to dispose of his entire allotment, rather than using them for collateral to cover a loan for a small current need, the banks could encourage the local purchase of these bonds by other thrifty citizens of their community." He suggested that to facilitate such borrowing the bonds be made transferable, at least through the banks.

"This offers the further possibility of inaugurating a national campaign to encourage widespread purchase of other Government bonds in addition to those disposed of by the veterans. Sooner or later the large floating debt must be funded, and this method will offer an opportunity to fund a good portion of it at a low rate.

"The banks have large excess reserves and are able to extend their loans without greatly tightening money rates or restricting the market for short-term notes to meet current Treasury needs."

FCC Is Unable To Verify Basis Of Bribe Hints

Commission Ends Inquiry, Brands 'Control' Rumor as Unfounded.

By the Associated Press.

After a month's effort to run down a web of rumors that it could be "bought or controlled," the Federal Communications Commission yesterday branded the reports baseless and confessed an inability to determine their origin.

The rumors were supposed to have emanated from a conversation in a local hotel last September. They included talk of a $25,000 bribe.

A committee of the whole commission, composed of all except two members, reported yesterday it was "unable to state whether the alleged conversation ever took place."

Reportedly involving the assignment of wave lengths to radio stations in the upper New York area, the conversation was said to have been overheard by A. Mortimer Prall, son of the chairman, Anning S. Prall, and a friend, Malcolm M. Kilduff, of New York.

"If the purported statements were made," the committee said, "they have been completely repudiated.

Would Prosecute.

"If the individuals who are responsible could be identified they should be prosecuted * * * relentlessly.

"While we conclude there is no basis for the charges made, we keenly regret that we cannot fix the responsibility for them."

The committee said it had learned that five men gathered in the hotel room, sipped highballs and "discussed and criticized" an FCC hearing on an application of the Knox Broadcasting Co., of Schnectady (New York), for authority to broadcast on a certain frequency.

Present in the room, the committee said, were Cecil D. Mastin, manager of WNBF; Harold E. Smith, manager of Station WOKO, at Albany, N. Y.; C. M. Jansky, jr., radio engineer, and Alfons B. Landa, an attorney, both of Washington, and Maurice Jansky, of Madison, Wis., a brother of C. M. Jansky.

Hear From Next Room.

Listening from an adjoining room, Prall and Kilduff were said to have overheard the alleged conversation and to have reported its substance to Chairman Prall and Herbert L. Pettey, secretary of the commission.

Prall and Kilduff, the committee said, reported the conversation involved talk of a $25,000 bribe to "straighten out Station WNBF's difficulties with the commission."

They also said that a person connected with the commission who could be "gotten to" was described and that it was intimated this person "had been in the pay of some company for a number of years."

Each of the occupants of the room swore he made no such statements, the committee reported. A sixth man who allegedly had been described as being able to "straighten out" the WNBF case for $25,000 said under oath he had never made any statement that anyone on the commission could be "bought or controlled."

Within the commission itself, the report added, there were "no irregularities" in handling the WNBF and the Knox Co. applications, both of which are still pending.

Cuban Flier Finishes 30-Day Trek to Spain

Seville, Spain, Feb. 14 (AP).—Lieut. Antonio Menendez, Cuban navy flier, arrived here at 5:25 p. m. (12:25 p. m., E. S. T.) today, completing a flight from Cuba which he began a month ago.

Menendez' route lay from Havana to Natal, Brazil, across the Caribbean and down the northeast coast of South America. From Natal he flew the South Atlantic to Dakar, Africa, then came north to Spain.

Lieut. Menendez covered more than 5,000 miles, mainly across water, in his solo flight.

said we could use it," the friend said.

Pediford agreed to the trip. Near Laurel, Md., there was a collision. The friend jumped from the car and fled. Pediford was left "holding the bag." He was arrested.

Some time later, the friend was apprehended by Detective Sergt. Jacob Wolf, of the police automobile squad. He gave his name as Edgar Richardson, also colored, and was sentenced to serve from one to three years in jail on grand larceny charges. He admitted he was driving the stolen car and testified that Pediford had no connection with the theft. Wolf likewise attempted to clear Pediford by testifying to his innocence.

But the unfortunate youth was indicted and sent to the District Jail. There he remained—his case forgotten.

Yesterday, The Post reporter started asking questions. First, Detective Sergt. Wolf was approached. He said:

"Why, I thought they had turned Pediford loose. He didn't know anything about that stolen car—and I told the grand jury so. I was surprised when he was indicted."

Then, a trip to the office of Assistant United States Attorney Allen J. Krouse.

Agrees to Aid.

Krouse was not familiar with the case, but agreed to aid the reporter in his investigation.

They went to the office of John C. Conliff, jr., chief clerk to the United States attorney.

"Pediford?—let's see—it must be here in the records some place," said Conliff's assistants.

The records were unearthed after much scurrying around. They showed that Pediford was still in the District Jail under indictment — and that's all they showed.

"We'll set his trial for Monday," said an assistant clerk. Then he studied the record for a moment.

"Why, this case should have been nolle prossed long ago," he added, surprised. "One man has already been sentenced for the crime."

And then the wheels of "justice" started to move. They moved fast. The Pediford record was shown to Assistant United States Attorney George McNeil, a chief prosecutor.

"This case should be nolle prossed right now," said McNeil. And it was.

A few minutes later, Pediford was free—free except for the memories of five long months.

"It was just one of those cases that get lost in the shuffle," said Krouse. He, however, was instrumental in effecting Pediford's release.

"We have many cases to handle and sometimes things go wrong," said Conliff.

"Gee, I'm glad to get out," said Pediford.

months for each $500. He served three years and was paroled from Lorton in March, 1935.

Judge Hitt last night denied he had been lenient in sentencing the youths because of any interest taken in their case by Senator Davis.

His putting the youths on probation for a year during which they will have to report to an officer of the court each week, probably has "saved their future," the judge said.

Judge Hitt said that he believes his court is a "corrective court" for first offenders and pointed to the practice of the District Supreme Court in placing many persons convicted of felonies, first offense, on probation.

Joseph Sanford, probation officer, said yesterday the boys were placed on a year probation. "Should the youths repeat the offense within a year, six of the charges could be placed against them," he said.

Virginia Republicans May Meet in Roanoke

Joseph L. Crupper, Republican national committeeman from Virginia, said yesterday it appeared Roanoke might be the convention city choice of the State Republicans this year, according to the Associated Press.

Administration Moves to Clinch Nebraska Vote

President to Be Entered in Primary to Counter Opposition.

By the Associated Press.

While the Republican situation remained static, the Administration countered indications of opposition in the Philadelphia convention yesterday by disclosing President Roosevelt would be entered in the Nebraska primaries.

Hostility among followers of Alfred E. Smith was illustrated, this time in Wisconsin. John M. Callahan, former Democratic committeeman, said at Milwaukee he had "about decided" to head a slate of "genuine Democrats" against candidates for a Roosevelt delegation.

As was the case in Illinois, Nebraska party leaders assured the President no opposition need be expected in that State. Both of these primaries will be held two months from yesterday.

The State ticket situation figured in a White House conference. The President wants the Independent Republican, Senator Norris, returned to the Senate. Senator Norris has not said he would run. Pending his decision, it was indicated the Democratic organization might move "to protect their interests" regarding the senatorial seat. The nature of the precautions was not revealed.

Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, and Arthur Mullen, former national committeeman who was the Roosevelt floor manager at the Chicago convention in 1932, told the President the State committee would file his name for the preference primary.

Similar decisions are expected in other important States. The effect would be to minimize chance-taking. Former Gov. Ely of Massachusetts, a Smith man, already has projected an attempt to elect anti-Roosevelt delegates in his State.

Convention Control Aim.

If formidable contests materialize, the prospect will be for some rival delegations to go to Philadelphia. Roosevelt managers aim to control the credentials committee in the interest of seating supporters of the New Deal.

The last hours for filing in Illinois passed yesterday, to leave only the President in the Democratic lists, and Senator Borah, of Idaho, and Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, in Republican. A result was to direct more attention to possibilities in Ohio, and especially the plans on behalf of Gov. Landon of Kansas.

Awaiting information about the intentions of Knox and Landon, Ed D. Schorr, Ohio Republican chairman, reported at Columbus an increasing sentiment for adherence to the organization's original "favorite son" plan. Under this, the State's delegation to Cleveland—if the regulars win on May 12—would practically be left free to throw their strength wherever they chose.

Borah's decision to seek delegates pledged to him brought discussion of reconsideration. Conflicting reports that Knox would oppose Borah, and Landon might, have brought no announcement from either principal.

Fight in Ohio Seen.

"Col. Knox has been wanting to enter," said Schorr, "but I don't believe he will until we arrive at some solution of our problem. We don't expect a solution for some days to come."

Should Knox go in, Landon strategists would be expected to reassess the situation. The Governor personally is believed by friends to be disinclined to invite the hard feelings a bitter preconvention struggle might lead to.

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 14 (AP).—A request by the Col. Frank Knox campaign organization for "all necessary papers" for entering the Chicago publisher in the Ohio Presidential primary indicated tonight at least a two-way fight for the State's 52 Republican national convention delegates.

Ed A. Hayes, chairman of the Knox-for-President committee, telephoned the Ohio Secretary of State's office from Chicago for the papers. Senator Borah already has entered the May primary.

A statement assailing Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia for his Lincoln Day speeech in Springfield, Ill., yesterday was issued by the man who was regarded as the George executive's last friend in a predominantly antagonistic Congressional Georgia delegation—Representative Malcolm C. Tarver, of Dalton, Ga.

"When any man, be he Governor of Georgia or not, eulogizes Lincoln on the ground that he saved his country from the assaults of the hosts of Lee, I resent it from the bottom of my heart," Tarver said in his statement.

"Without regard to politics, or what effect it may have on my own political fortunes with the Governor's followers, I would be untrue to the memories of those whose blood runs in my veins if I did not denounce any attempt to tarnish the memories of their heroic sacrifices.

Midnight Sees Reprieve's End To Hauptmann

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 14.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's 30-day reprieve neared its end tonight, and the fate of the convicted Lindbergh baby slayer rested again with Gov. Harold G. Hoffman.

The Governor, recovering in a local hospital from a nasal operation last Saturday, contemplated no immediate move.

William S. Conklin, his press aid, said the present reprieve, which saved Hauptmann from the chair a month ago, would expire at midnight Saturday without the Governor's extending it.

Conklin said the Governor would not grant another reprieve unless the chief executive and Attorney General David T. Wilentz, who is vacationing in Miami, Fla., agreed one was necessary.

At least five weeks will elapse before Hauptmann can go to the chair, and in the interim, the Governor could again stay execution if he found his new investigation warranted it.

Although Wilentz is absent, his aids intend to ask Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard next week to set a new death date. Trenchard, the 72-year-old judge who presided over the long Flemington trial, is also ill and may sign the new warrant at his home.

Under the law, the date must be not less than four and not more than eight weeks from the day the warrant is signed. The attorney general's office said the date, if the warrant is signed next week, will be sometime between the week of March 23 and the week of April 13.

Hauptmann, calm and collected after his tearful outburst yesterday when Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer, talked with him, awaited Leibowitz's second visit tomorrow.

Senator Pope Demands Rigid Neutrality Bill

By the Associated Press.

Charging American exporters with responsibility for prolonging the Italian-Ethiopian war, Senator Pope (Democrat), Idaho, yesterday opened a drive to replace the compromise neutrality bill with one of sterner stuff.

"Every man, woman and child in America today knows," he said, "that the Italian war machine is running only because American exporters are free to supply it with all the oil Mussolini may buy."

But even as Pope broadcast his address over the radio, the House Foreign Affairs Committee unanimously approved the modified arms embargo bill and Senate leaders expressed confidence it would course through promptly, well ahead of the expiration of the present embargo law, February 29.

(The bill, as approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, provides an embargo on arms ammunition and implements of war against all belligerents except American republics attacked by non-American nations.

To be Called Monday.

House leaders expected to call up the measure Monday under suspension of the rules, which automatically limits debate to 40 minutes and prohibits amendments but requires a two-thirds majority—confidently expected—to put the measure through.

Pope and a dozen other Senators were pledged to a last-ditch fight for a stronger measure—one providing embargoes on raw materials as well as war implements.

Pope described it as only "quaintly" a neutrality bill, warning that it was lulling America "into false security."

The earlier bills, including one first proposed by the Administration "genuinely aimed at keeping us out of war," Pope said, pointing to proposals to limit exports of war materials, such as oil, cotton, copper and iron, and requirements that exporters to "trade at their own risk" if they dealt with belligerents.

Pope argued that America should be in a position to aid other nations, such as League members, in suppressing war, a possibility which stirred up the bitterest opposition to the earlier measure and brought a warning tonight from Senator Johnson (Republican), California, that he would "fight right to the end" against re-incorporating the rejected provisions.

Pope said "the rest of the nations of the world, which are endeavoring to stop Mussolini by stopping shipments of materials for his fighting machine, know perfectly well that their efforts are being frustrated by the inchoate, inconsistent, willy-nilly foreign policy of the United States, and yet the Foreign Relations Committee has struck out restrictions on the export of war materials.

The Negroes were killed when a heavy gust of wind leveled a dormitory at a school near here. The victim, Walter Coleman, and an aged unidentified man, had gone into the building for shelter.
